Don't Put Up with Poor Performers

Michael Carpenter

What a great concept: You can pick the best players for your team based on their past performance and potential. And, you can also try to balance your "picks" based on what position you need to fill on your team and how each of your picks might work best with the other "handpicked" players. Your list of potential players starts with the "best" and you "pick" your way down the roster until your team is completed. Of course, when one of your "picks" doesn't produce results, you complain and curse and wish you had never chosen them – but, sometimes, you're stuck with them.

Candidates

Well, in some ways, we have the beginnings of our own "fantasy team" in law enforcement. We have the chance to pick our new employees based on past performance and potential. That's what the testing process is all about. In theory, we have a list of "the best players" when we get the final list of candidates after they have completed the written test, oral interview, polygraph, background investigation, etc., etc. Then, the bosses decide what "players" to hire for a position and they hope that the new hires will work best with the other "handpicked" players on the department. Of course, when one of the "picks" doesn't produce results, the bosses complain and curse and wish they had never chosen them and, then, that becomes your problem as their supervisor.

There are a couple of basic principles which apply to several different aspects of life. One of these is "the bell-shaped curve." The easiest way – at least for me – to figure out the bell-shaped curve is to remember back when you were in school. In any class, a couple of students would get "A's" and a few more would get "B's," most of the class would get "C's," a few would get "D's," and a couple of students would get "F's." Simply put, there were a couple of "stars" in your class, most students were average and there were a couple of kids who were problem students. Well, I am convinced that the "bell-shaped curve" applies to employees, too. Think about the people you work with right now: a couple of them are "stars," most are average employees and a couple of them are problem employees.

The Luck of the Draw

If you could handpick the people on your shift (like on a "fantasy sports team"), of course, you would pick all the "stars." Unfortunately, you can't handpick them. You get what you get, often with little, or no, input. Sometimes, officers are randomly assigned to your shift by the boss or, sometimes, you are moved to another shift as a supervisor. In getting to know your new officer or in getting to know your new shift, some supervisors use the bell-shaped curve. Students are placed on the academic bell-shaped curve based on performance and employees can also be placed on a bell-shaped curve based on performance. A teacher has the problem of having a class full of students who have a wide range of abilities and talents. You have that same problem as a supervisor. Teachers can't overfocus on the problem students because the performance of the other students will suffer, but they can't ignore them, either. You have that same problem as a supervisor.

Let's talk about your problem employees. Nearly every command has them just like every class in school has them. And, of course, some create more problems than others for you, as their performance ranges from a "C-" to an "F." You can recognize them in a couple of different ways. They continually violate basic rules; they either can't, or won't, follow proper procedures; and the quantity and quality of their work is far below that of the rest of the shift, etc.

What can you do about such poor performers? The first thing (and, maybe, the easiest thing) which comes to mind would be to ignore them. Well, you can't – no more than a teacher can ignore the "C-" to "F" students in a class. So, what can you do?

Ideas to Consider

First, you have a supervisory responsibility to use every motivational tool you can think of to help bring their performance up. Give them all of the necessary assistance and training they need to help them improve their performance. Then, counsel them and use every other positive professional management technique available to offer assistance. All employees deserve the opportunity to succeed and your job is to provide them with whatever it takes for that opportunity. Don't try something once and, then, if it doesn't work, just give up. It might take some

Hotel Room Photos Could Help Catch Sex Traffickers

NEWS

For investigators attempting to locate sex traffickers and their victims, online advertisements can contain critical clues. The smallest of details in a hotel room could give away its location, but there are too many ads for law enforcement to scan each of them for clues. A simple smartphone application called TraffickCam (<https://traffickcam.com>) uses crowdsourced snapshots of hotel rooms to help law enforcement locate victims and prosecute sex traffickers. Travelers can turn on their phone's GPS location and upload photos of their hotel room from four different angles to TraffickCam's database. The idea is that law enforcement agencies can then check advertisements featuring suspected trafficking victims in hotel rooms against TraffickCam's database of photos. Since launching in June 2016, more than 150,000 hotels have been added to the database.

additional time and effort to train or retrain some employees. And, as you reach out to these employees to improve performance, I would recommend that you document every action you take.

However, at some point, after you have exhausted all of your supervisory options without realizing an appropriate improvement in their poor performance, you must take actions which may result in "other arrangements" for your poor performer. Poor performers, by failing to respond to your efforts to assist them, have placed you in a position where you must take such action. Your failure to do so under these circumstances will negatively impact your career and reduce the overall effectiveness of your shift or unit.

Factors

As you consider what action to take, you need to consider several factors. First, talk to your boss before you do anything. There is no point in starting some type of discipline or remedial action against your employee if your boss is not going to support it. (For example: A sergeant disciplined an officer and gave him two days "on the bench." The chief overturned that decision; perhaps because the officer and chief played poker together all of the time.) Also, make sure that whatever action you are considering is consistent with your agency's bargaining contract and/or your agency's policy and procedure dealing with "discipline" (or whatever you call it in your agency). You do not want to be the cause of starting a long and drawn out legal battle if your employee sues you or your department for an unfair labor practice or an illegal disciplinary decision which you might make.

To follow are common problems which may occur if you repeatedly fail to take the actions necessary to reduce, or eliminate, poor performance in your command.

Morale Suffers

When the hardworking officers on your shift or in your command see individuals repeatedly getting away with rule violations and generally poor performance, they naturally question why they are working so hard and following all of the rules. After all, isn't everyone getting paid the same?

If equal pay means equal work, then they may feel that they should quit working so hard and conform to the poor performers' work standard. After all, you are apparently willing to accept this poor standard.

You Lose Respect

The members of your command look to you for guidance and direction. When you repeatedly make good decisions and take appropriate actions, they continue to respect you.

However, the reverse is also true. If they perceive that you are unwilling, or afraid, to take action to correct a problem which is so obvious, they will lose respect for you as a commander. Once lost, that respect is difficult, if not impossible, to regain.

Your Problems Compound

If one of your employees ignores or violates a minor policy infraction and you make a choice to ignore some sort of corrective action, this can quickly create problems for you. First, other employees will see your lack of action and they will begin to question your abilities as a supervisor. That doubt will then carry over into their day-to-day actions and may influence their overall performance.

In addition, the minor violations you ignored initially can quickly turn into major rule violations when it appears that you don't care. The results of such major rule violations can then cause serious problems for you from your superiors, from the media or from other investigative or watchdog agencies.

Every officer on your shift carefully observes you every day to see what you do, when you do it and how you do it. If you are willing to accept poor quality and quantity of work from one of your officers, you have to expect this to affect the morale and motivation of your "A" and "B" officers. Ultimately, you will see decreased productivity from your entire team and this can ultimately render your shift or unit ineffective in meeting its goals. When it reaches that point, it might be time for your boss to make "other arrangements" for you.

Solution

It seems simple. Take positive steps quickly to correct unacceptable behavior. But, how many of us have worked for bosses or have seen bosses ignore this simple solution? And, how many of us have seen the results? It isn't pretty.

To avoid the inevitable downward spiral of putting up with poor performers, all you have to do is to take appropriate action when it needs to be taken.

Insist on a reasonable quantity of high quality work. Require adherence to established policies and procedures. Be sure that the members of your command understand the rules and, then, enforce them equally for all.

Maintaining high, but reasonable, standards for you and your employees allows everyone in your command to know what is expected of them and to meet those standards. Individuals who choose not to maintain their performance at the expected levels are solely responsible for their own destiny and "other arrangements" may be in their near future. P&SN

It's That Time Again – Visit Sunny Florida!

We're a quarter of the way through 2017 and my home state of Florida is keeping its reputation for bizarre criminal justice news well in the forefront. You just can't make this stuff up.

However, you've undoubtedly noticed the image of the "Smallest Police Station in the World" (it's a phone booth) located in the quiet fishing village of Carrabelle, FL, on US 98 at the corner of CR67. Do you want to learn more? Log on to their Web site at <http://carrabelle.org/things-to-do/worlds-smallest-police-station/>. And, if you're ever in the area, feel free to stop by – the good folks in Carrabelle are happy to have you take a souvenir picture for your friends and family!

Recently, a guy here in Florida claimed that his dog shot his girlfriend. Yes, you read that right. His dog shot his girlfriend (who lived). The victim, whose name is Summer Miracle, was in bed sleeping when she was struck in the leg by a bullet.

We're not done. The dog's name is Diesel. So, apparently, the dog jumped up on the nightstand where the gun was sitting (where we all keep our 9mms, right?) and somehow managed to create enough force on the trigger to discharge a round into the woman's leg. Diesel shot Summer Miracle – accidentally. How, I wonder, do you do paw swabs for gunshot residue?

And, what are the charges? Everyone from the Palm Beach County State Attorney's Office is probably still out drinking after getting briefed on this so, no, nothing yet. Diesel, who knows nothing of the Fifth Amendment, wisely remained silent. Whether alcohol was involved is yet to be determined. Personally, I think they should send Diesel's bowl to the lab just to be sure.

Palm Beach is an interesting place. Despite its placid, relaxing sounding name, it's a haven for the bizarre and unexplainable. In February of last year, a 23-year-old guy threw a live three foot alligator into a Wendy's® restaurant via the drive-thru window. His mother was appalled at all of the attention the case got. "It was just a prank. He's a prankster. He does stuff like this because he thinks it's funny." Gosh, Mom, thanks for setting us all straight. I'm going to grab a Frosty®, um...to go.

Alligators are pretty calm – if you know how to handle them, or if you toss them a piece of steak with some fentanyl in it. They are also abundant in the southeast counties and, in Palm Beach County, the Everglades is not a long ride at all. So, you can drive west, grab a gator and head to your favorite fast-food joint in pretty short order.

In Lake City, which is way up in north Florida, an auto thief running from police climbed a tree to get away. Sadly, he fell out of the tree, sustaining multiple fractures in the process. Now, before you go making Flori-DUH jokes, I must tell you that this brilliant lad is from Tennessee. He's not the first criminal to fall out of a tree, for sure. I remember a homicide case in which we served a search warrant on a narcotics house at about 5:00 a.m. The house had this metal cage around the front door, so we got a tow truck to hook it and pull it off. The truck's tires spun for a few moments and then, pow! the metal grate came off and the truck lurched forward, hitting a tree. That's when a guy came tumbling out of the tree, wailing as he went. He had a few sprains, but was okay. He was the lookout of the house and, when I interviewed him, he had the worst stutter I've ever heard on a person. He was probably still trying to get the "P" in "Police!" out when the tow truck hit his observation post.

I'm not sure what it is which makes perps believe that climbing a tree will suddenly render them invisible. In a completely unrelated incident in Flagler County, deputies recently arrested a 31-year-old career criminal on multiple charges – assault on a law enforcement officer, felony criminal mischief, resisting arrest, and more. Using escape techniques he learned from watching an episode of the TV show "Cops," he moved the handcuffs from behind his back to his front and pried open the door of the patrol car in which he was relaxing. While still handcuffed, he managed to climb a tree and subsequently fell out of said tree.

Over in Palm Beach, a 25-year-old "gentleman" recently set fire to a suburban Lake Worth country club and posted videos on Snapchat during the blaze.

"You know what?" the suspect reportedly stated. "Y'all gonna see a structure fire tonight. I hope you all enjoy." He reportedly sent Snapchat videos during the fire to multiple friends and acquaintances.

Speaking of the improper use of social media, a man was recently arrested at his home after he posted a video of

"Without good leadership, an organization has no future – regardless of its size, mission or resources."

– Kathleen McChesney and William Gavin,
Pick Up Your Own Brass

himself on Instagram being pursued by police officers in Hollywood (South Florida). The man posted a video of himself being chased during a Martin Luther King Jr. Day event which takes over the streets of South Florida each year. Detectives were looking through the man's timeline on Instagram when they found a photo of his ATV with his license plate clearly visible.

We in law enforcement never, ever lament that these people are running around sharing the air with us. After all, they've kept us gainfully employed and always will. You just wonder about the whole mental health thing, as no one seems to learn from other people's mistakes, much less their own. No one is inventing new crimes or new ways to get away with doing things.

Until next time, brothers and sisters in blue, be safe out there. P&SN

Please Retire These Range Sayings!

There are a number of catchphrases which firearms instructors have been repeating over and over for what seems like an eternity.

Regardless of the instructor's home base, these phrases are generally accepted and repeated throughout the country without a great deal of critical thought. Instead of offering help to our students, the use of these phrases oftentimes contributes to a lack of improvement. From this point forward, I suggest we stop using the following phrases and truly focus on helping our shooters prevail in their gunfights.

"Anticipating Recoil"

When I first became a firearms instructor, I kept hearing instructors tell students, "You're anticipating recoil." At the time, this made some sense to me because I saw so many shooters convulsively tighten their grip on their handguns immediately prior to firing. I realized this was a common problem for shooters, even those who were very proficient. These skilled shooters would occasionally throw a shot and I would hear an instructor correct them by saying, "You're anticipating recoil." Being the new guy on the range, when I saw a shooter convulsively tighten his (or her) grip, modeling the behavior of my mentors, I started telling them the same thing.

Over time, instead of observing the shooter from afar or just interpreting his target, I started to ask questions and pay more detailed attention to what the shooter was actually doing. I began asking shooters why they thought they were missing; what they were seeing; and what thoughts were going through their mind at the time the shot broke. It confirmed my belief that the problem was actually an attempt to capture the perfect sight picture. Most of these shooters told me their sights were perfectly aligned and they wanted the gun to shoot...NOW! This made sense to me. What I was observing was that a lot of these shooters were accelerating their trigger press while simultaneously tightening their grip. It seemed most shooters were attempting to time the shot to coincide with what they perceived to be the perfect sight picture.

The surprise for me was that the problem didn't actually have anything to do with recoil. They were trying to capture the perfect sight picture and instructors were telling them they had a recoil problem. I started to examine the words we were using and how they could be interpreted by our shooters. Anticipating means to expect, predict or foresee something which may occur in the future. However, to a lot of our shooters, it also implies a certain amount of fear, anxiety or apprehension. Basically, we were telling our shooters – even our skilled shooters – that they were afraid of their handguns because of recoil. The phrase, "You're anticipating recoil," needs to be retired so firearms instructors will actually diagnose a shooter's marksmanship problems.

Another range mantra I've heard non-stop since I entered law enforcement is the refrain, "Front sight, front sight, front sight." I've often witnessed, and participated in, standing over the shoulder of a shooter and continuously offering this bit of sage wisdom. This phrase is usually uttered by a firearms instructor who believes that focusing on the front sight will remedy all other marksmanship errors and often accompanies the diagnosis of, "You're anticipating recoil." The problem is this is frequently not the solution to an undiagnosed problem.

Most of the time, it's pretty simple to identify sight picture or sight alignment issues. An instructor trick I learned from Peter Burlingame, Self Defense Initiative, Inc. in the US Virgin Islands, is to have the shooter unload his handgun, remove the slide from his handgun and holster the lower frame assembly. Then, have the shooter remove the recoil guide rod/spring assembly and barrel, and set them aside. The shooter should be left with only the slide. The instructor stands in front of the student and the student obtains a sight picture on one of the instructor's eyes. This allows the instructor to see what the student is seeing through their sights (see photo one). After having done this with many instructors and students, I am certain that looking through the rear sight at the front sight is not the problem for most shooters.

Instead of repeating over and over "front sight, front sight, front sight," firearms instructors should pay more attention to what the shooter is actually doing. If it is, in fact, a sight picture/alignment problem, then doing the above mentioned exercise will frequently solve that problem. However, the problem is more often

HIGHER PERFORMING BALLISTIC PROTECTION

The ever-present dangers of routine duty make life on the roads and in the streets more than just a typical day on the job. The potential for violent confrontation can lurk anywhere... even a routine traffic stop can spiral out of control. High performance body armor is no longer a luxury, it's a necessity.

Body armor engineered with Twaron® microfilament fibers produces a lighter more comfortable vest—with the most advanced ballistic protection. A vest that flexs with you, allowing you to react quickly and confidently. That's why ballistic protection engineered with Twaron has rapidly become the body armor of choice for some of the largest and most active departments. So, whether you're hitting the road or the streets, do it with the outstanding protection, performance and unencumbered mobility and improved comfort of Twaron.

a breakdown in the shooting platform. The shooting platform is a combination of how the shooter holds the firearm and how stable his stance is at the time the shot is fired. Grip and stance combine to form the shooting platform. Instead of repeating "front sight, front sight, front sight," take a look at stabilizing the shooting platform.

"Jerking the Trigger"

Let's get this out of the way first: Everyone jerks the trigger! Skilled shooters jerk the trigger less than unskilled shooters, but everyone jerks the trigger. It's simply a matter of degrees. If you don't believe me, ask Rob Leatham, one of the most successful competitive shooters of all time. It's easy to work the trigger in a smooth straight line straight to the rear when shooting slowly, but the application of marksmanship at combative speeds means you're going to jerk the trigger. It's nearly impossible to shoot quickly

Todd Fletcher demonstrating a method for training shooters about sight picture and alignment which allows instructors to see what the students are seeing without jerking the trigger.

Another reason this phrase needs to be retired to the trash heap of training axioms is because shooters and instructors focus too much time and attention trying to improve the difficult skill of moving the trigger smoothly instead of fixing the one thing which most easily solves the problem: improving the shooting platform. The single best way to minimize the amount of muzzle movement caused by jerking the trigger is to stabilize the shooting platform. Doing so decreases muzzle movement during trigger movement and helps bring the muzzle back on target quickly and effectively. Once shooters become better at stabilizing their shooting platform, then we can work on a smoother trigger press.

"Train Like You Fight"

How many of us know with certainty what our next fight is going to look like? If we knew what our fight was going to look like, then we would only spend time training the skills we would need for that fight. "Train like you fight" is one of the most absurd things I've heard in law enforcement training. Because none of us knows what our

National Resource and Technical Assistance Center for Improving Law Enforcement Investigations

NEWS

The National Resource and Technical Assistance Center for Improving Law Enforcement Investigations (NRTAC) (<http://centerforimprovinginvestigations.org>) is a training and technical assistance center, created in collaboration with the Bureau of Justice Assistance, to improve law enforcement investigations at the local level through the development of resources on new tools and methodologies; assessment of current practices and recommendations on innovative investigative policies and practices; assessment of departmental investigatory functions and practices; and issue-related recommendations for improvement of investigative practices. The NRTAC will provide site specific assistance from some of the nation's most accomplished investigators, prosecutors, researchers, and policy experts who are directly relevant to the investigative process and criminal justice system. This assistance is available free of cost to individuals and departments seeking to improve investigations ranging from homicide to computer crime investigations. Examples of technical assistance or projects that the NRTAC can assist with are available on the resources page at <http://centerforimprovinginvestigations.org/resources/>.

It's impossible to shoot well quickly without jerking the trigger. The secret lies in creating a stable platform which brings the muzzle back on target quickly and effectively.

next fight is going to look like, we need to be ready for anything.

"Train like you fight" most often means we should train using the same uniforms and gear we use on the street. I can't argue with that logic. We've all seen the detectives and command staff on the range using duty gear which needed to be dusted off and resized prior to training. We do need to train with our duty gear in order to be ready to fight under those conditions. But, we don't need to work on skill development wearing all that gear. Being weighed down and burdened by a lot of uncomfortable gear can actually hamper the learning process. Instead of learning, we're counting down the seconds until we can gear down and go home. No one wants to continuously train while uncomfortable.

What happens if our next fight takes place while we're off duty and in plain-clothes? Not counting court, meetings and other ancillary duties, most of us spend 40-48 hours per week working. Even though it is more likely for us to be involved in a fight at work, we still have 120-128 hours left in the week for our fight to occur. Since you don't know what your fight is going to look like or where the fight will take place, how do you "train like you fight"? What if your fight takes place at your home in the middle of the night? Does this mean we should be training on the range wearing boxer shorts? "Train like you fight" needs to be retired because it leads you to believe that you can accurately pick when, where and how your next fight is going to occur.

Conclusion

There are probably dozens of other range phrases which could be added to this list and each of us probably has our own favorites. So, instead of recycling the same tired worn-out expressions, let's cast a critical eye on what we're doing and saying during training. P&SN

Effective Ways To Reconnect With Your Community

Kathryn Loving

People have stopped talking to each other, and it didn't happen overnight.

Technology has grown so fast that most of us can't keep up. Suddenly, it's easier to text, tweet or "like" than talk, yet the absence of human contact and interpersonal relationships leave out a basic psychological need – the need to communicate face-to-face. Police are not immune to this reality and, in fact, law enforcement has had to adapt their methods of communication in order to help the communities they serve. But, that doesn't mean that communication, as we once knew it, is no longer valuable or necessary. In fact, face-to-face interaction is more important than ever, especially when it comes to law enforcement and our communities.

Connecting with the Community

Lack of communication results in an "us versus them" mentality and doesn't work well when it involves a community and those sworn to protect it. We can all recognize the necessity for the two parties to merge together to resolve issues and there are several actions law enforcement organizations can take to connect with their communities.

1. Kids are the key. Forging relationships between urban youth leaders and police can occur in a variety of ways. Constructive dialogue between the two groups through forums and programs can facilitate ideas, creating an understanding of the two perspectives. Incorporating core values from organizations like Strategies for Youth: Connecting Cops & Kids (SFY) (strategiesforyouth.org/about) is helpful in bringing youth and police together. SFY even has pamphlets they distribute to kids which promote positive interactions with police officers.

Community programs such as bicycle safety, Special Olympics, school safety programs, Shop with A Cop, and youth sports leagues are also beneficial in building rapport. The contact between officers and youth doesn't have to be a formal program and can be as simple as a street chat or picking up a ball and shooting some hoops in the park.

2. May the Force Be WITH You. Creating a culture of integrity is in the forefront of all police

Pamphlets like these can help promote greater understanding between law enforcement and communities.

Programs like “Coffee with a Cop” help to improve trust and build relationships.

administrations and begins by mirroring the police force to represent the community it serves. Training pertaining to cultural awareness and empathy toward specific populations is also being incorporated into police education. Cultural disparity in law enforcement tends to be a sensitive topic and often difficult to discuss, but it must be addressed. It is important to reflect your community through a diverse organizational makeup.

3. Dive in! Immerse officers in the community they serve. By volunteering time and representing the department in plain clothes, they are viewed in a different light. When officers are involved in town projects and engage with community members on or off duty, they invest themselves and belong. This stimulates dialogue and sustains community partnerships. Police become a part of a bigger picture and are not singularly perceived as an instrument for fighting crime. By being recognized as citizens, they become part of the community.

4. Community Policing Reinvented. Not long ago, community policing was at the top of every administrator’s agenda. This concept merges problem solving; organizational reconstruction and change; and community partnerships to find a balance in community relations and prioritize proactive responses for combatting crime. Encouraging community partnerships is not a new concept. However, it’s more focused on specific community needs. For instance, the Coffee with a Cop (coffeewithacop.com) program provides a friendly platform which facilitates discussions and connections within the participating communities.

Stretch the imagination on this concept to include broader reaches such as forums, idea generating conferences with multiple disciplines, empowerment of community leaders, and using multiagency task forces to combat crime, litter, code enforcement, and infrastructure problems. The new twist on marrying the community with cops sinks communication barriers and creates a safe environment.

5. Now You See Me. Certainly, we are all aware that law enforcement officials are exposed to human misery, dynamic situations and sensitive circumstances. These occurrences impact communities and the members will demand to be informed of local matters and safety concerns. Just what should the police release to the public to keep privacy intact while also meeting the expectations of transparency? Privacy and information often don’t mesh and are bound by a patchwork of complex laws, policies and regulations, yet somewhere in this mix lay the expectations of police accountability and organizational transparency.

Additionally, an investigation can be compromised by releasing too much information. A balance may be found through administrators looking at transparency as promoting department fundamentals, embracing public engagement and being accountable to their community.

Public Information Officers (PIOs) have been around for some time and many larger law enforcement departments incorporate training for administrators and PIOs into their managerial model. Police administrators can also procure public trust by being proactive

A Wireless Station which Travels Down City Streets

During a 1917 parade down Fifth Avenue by the New York City Police Department, a motorized wireless station attracted more than its expected share of attention from bystanders. This was due to the mystery which was always attached to anything pertaining to wireless telegraphy.

The motorized wireless station of the NYPD was a phase of the preparedness movement. It carried a forceful transmitter and a long-distance receiving set, together with an eight wire aerial, supported by a mast about 25 feet high and another one about ten feet high. Because a ground connection would be impractical in a mobile station of this kind, reliance was placed on a capacity ground. It was said that the intention of the police was to maintain communication between the wireless truck and a wireless station in real time. Thus, in time of emergency, it would be possible to maintain uninterrupted reports between scattered forces and headquarters, even in the event of the failure of ordinary means. Even though it was a step forward for its time, the use of the truck in areas with low hanging wires, overpasses, bridges, and other obstacles was not practical.

with press releases, all while keeping valuable investigation tactics closed until such time that they can become public knowledge.

Law enforcement officials understand the importance of connecting with their communities in order to fairly apply laws and ensure public safety. Despite their best efforts, two vastly different perspectives exist, throwing the police/citizen relationships out of balance. Reestablishing trust and legitimacy in police departments is a priority among organizational administrators. Police are now stepping forward with initiatives to remedy the gaps and build community partnerships. This transformation is vital to both officers and the people they are sworn to protect. P&SN

The midsole cushioning is compiled of multiple layers to protect the tactical warrior, including a dual density EVA midsole and a full-length Rock'n Roll Plate™ on the bottom side. On top of the midsole is a Flex-Lite™ full-length insole board which provides support, stability and comfort like no other boot currently available.

The upper of the Abbootabad Hiker could double as a tactical work boot as the features are numerous. In addition to using waterproof nubuck leather, an Alta-Dry™ waterproof membrane ensures that water will not penetrate the upper under the worst conditions.

Available colors include coyote, black, brown, and hunter green.

New Fit Options for 7TS™ Series Holster Line

Geared towards officers seeking a reliable and quality holster for their TASER® X26P model, Safariland® now offers the Model 7520 SLS EDW Holster with Clip and a Model 7280 with standard duty UBL (Universal Belt Loop). Additionally, all 7TS duty and tactical models are now available for GLOCK® and S&W M&P® weapons with a SureFire XC1 Light.

The Model 7520 SLS EDW Holster for the TASER X26P offers Level II Retention™ and features the SLS (Self Locking System) rotating hood which remains locked until pushed down and forward by the user.

Safariland has also released 7TS holster fits to accommodate the SureFire XC1 Light. The 7TS holster is constructed of SafariSeven™ material, a proprietary nylon blend from DuPont™ which is completely nonabrasive to the weapon's finish.

VPAM Certified Helmet Available

Through an exclusive partnership with the German company, Busch PROtective, Armor Express is distributing the AMP-1 TP, the lightest and very first composite (nonmetal) helmet to achieve VPAM (HVN-2009) certification. Constructed of a multi-layered aramid composite, this new breakthrough offers ballistic capabilities previously attainable only in titanium helmets. The AMP-1 TP is capable of stopping ballistic threats as close as .78" from the edge and multiple shots on a small surface area which enhances the helmet's protective area by up to 50% compared to standard ballistic helmets. Because of VPAM's extremely high testing requirements, there is minimal energy transferred from the helmet shell to the user's head.

Tactical Deployment Pack

This one-of-a-kind tactical case by Eastern Beacon Industries is designed to carry necessary gear in one bag – replacing the need for four or five separate cases – and is the only case on the market to have a removable ballistic helmet carrier. All of your gear is easily accessible by the zippered compartments or VELCRO® closures.

The heavy-duty, water-resistant case can be carried by the side handles or worn as a backpack by releasing the hidden straps on the rear of the case.

New 12-Gauge Slug

Brenneke USA has introduced the ATS® Anti-Terror Slug, a 12-gauge, 2 3/4" cartridge which contains an extremely hard, one ounce (424-gr.) slug. It was developed specifically for urban environments when an assailant might be in a vehicle, a building or behind a barricade. The ATS provides penetration and stopping power that standard handgun ammunition, as well as most cartridges for automatic weapons, cannot match.

"Above and Beyond..." salutes Officer Jason Falconer of the Avon, MN, Police Department

Don Lomax

ST. CLOUD, MN
SEPTEMBER 17, 2016
8:14 PM

OFF DUTY OFFICER JASON FALCONER WAS SHOPPING AT CROSSROADS MALL WHEN HIS ATTENTION WAS DRAWN TO A COMMOTION IN THE COMMON AREA. AN INDIVIDUAL, DAHIR AHMED ADAN, WEARING A PRIVATE SECURITY UNIFORM, WAS ACTING ERRATICALLY, WAVING TWO LARGE KNIVES, AND YELLING, "ALLAHU AKBAR"! INJURED AND PANICKED CUSTOMERS SCATTERED AND SHOUTED TO WARN OTHER SHOPPERS TO RUN AND SAVE THEMSELVES.

ADAN THEN APPROACHED OFFICER FALCONER, WHO WAS DRESSED IN CIVILIAN CLOTHING. HE ASK FALCONER, "ARE YOU MUSLIM?" FALCONER ANSWERED, "NO." ADAN THEN TURNED AWAY AND FALCONER OBSERVED TWO KNIVES IN HIS HANDS.

FALCONER DREW HIS GUN AND YELLED AT ADAN, ANNOUNCING THAT HE WAS A POLICE OFFICER AND ORDERING ADAN TO DROP THE WEAPONS. ADAN RAN TOWARDS A MALL STORE WITH FALCONER IN PURSUIT! ADAN DID LIE DOWN ON THE FLOOR FOR A FEW SECONDS, BUT THEN JUMPED BACK UP, ATTACKING OFFICER FALCONER!

FALCONER OPENED FIRE ON HIS ATTACKER! STRUCK SEVERAL TIMES, ADAN FELL TO THE FLOOR. OFFICER FALCONER INSTRUCTED THE BELLIGERENT ATTACKER TO STAY DOWN AND CONTINUED SHOWING OTHERS HIS BADGE, REPEATING THAT HE WAS A POLICE OFFICER!

ADAN, AGAIN ROSE AND ATTEMPTED TO ATTACK FALCONER WHO FIRED SEVERAL MORE TIMES, FINALLY PUTTING THE ATTACKER DOWN FOR THE LAST TIME. ADAN, STILL DEFIANT, CRAWLED TOWARD FALCONER WITH A KNIFE UNTIL HE COULD NO LONGER CRAWL, FELL FACE DOWN, AND EXPIRED!

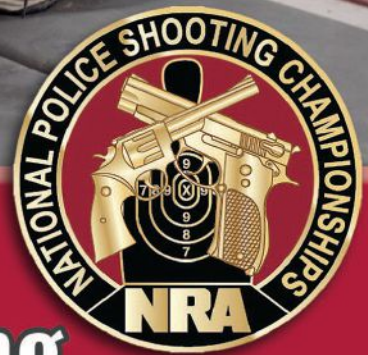

NINE INNOCENT SHOPPERS WERE STABBED IN THE MELEE AND MANY MORE COULD HAVE SUFFERED INJURY, EVEN DEATH, HAD OFFICER FALCONER, A WEAPONS EXPERT, NOT BEEN AT THE RIGHT PLACE AT THE RIGHT TIME TO END THE ATTACKER'S RAMPAGE. FOR HIS ACTIONS, JASON FALCONER RECEIVED THE 2016 NRA LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER OF THE YEAR AWARD!

New touch screen display.
New dash monitor mount.
New freedom of mobility.

Mount your computer remotely.

The latest mobile office solution from Havis features a new lightweight, high-resolution touch screen display and optional vehicle-specific mounts that maximize comfort, safety, functionality and in-vehicle space. The display functions as an external monitor that mounts close to the dash with the option of mounting the computing device elsewhere in the vehicle to save space in the cabin. A tilt/swivel hinge provides for a range of adjustments to reduce glare and body strain and allow access to the OEM control panel.

- Display and Mount have been tested to industry safety and vibration standards to ensure quality performance in rugged conditions.
- Compact design optimizes space for additional equipment and peripherals (keyboards, scanners, etc.) to be mounted in the cabin.
- Compatible with Ford Interceptor Utility and Sedan, Chevy Tahoe, Dodge Charger, Ford Transit and Ford F-150 and F-250 to 750 models.
- Display, mount and peripherals can be bundled into a mobile office solution or purchased separately.

LIGHT CHANNELS OPTIONS

SOLID, 2, 3, OR 4 LIGHT
LIGHTS NOT INCLUDED

Westin offers Light Channel options in solid (no light openings) as well as 2, 3 or 4 light configurations. They are designed for most popular public safety lights: SoundOff Signal (nForce Surface Mount), Code 3 (Chase and MR6), Federal Signal (IPX6-IMPAXX and Micro Pulse6), and Whelen (ION-SERIES). Light Channels include light specific brackets and hardware. One or more of these Light Channel options are sure to serve your agency's public safety lighting requirement.

FROM SHOT?

The 26th Annual Roundup Covering New
Firearms of Most Interest to Law Enforcement

Mike Boyle

The SHOT Show might be best described as the world's largest gun fair where new offerings from manufacturers, large and small, are displayed. This year's event was held on January 17 – 20, 2017, at the Sands Convention Center in Las Vegas and it drew over 60,000 attendees.

With over 1600 vendors, it is impossible to see it all. As always, there were surprises and variations on proven themes, as well as a few disappointments. Many of us had hoped to see the FBI inspired GLOCK® 17M or the Beretta APX striker-fired pistol, but they apparently were not ready for prime time – maybe next year.

What follows is a quick rundown on some new firearms which might appeal to law enforcement and security professionals. It includes models appropriate for duty, tactical and plainclothes applications and there just might be something out there for you.

One of the great features of the Tikka TAC A1 is the double stage trigger with adjustable pull weight.

Beretta Defense Technologies
(berettadefensetechnologies.com)

One of the more interesting new offerings from Beretta is the Tikka TAC A1 tactical bolt-action rifle. Featuring the highly regarded Tikka action, operation of the Tikka TAC A1 is super smooth and its two stage trigger can be adjusted between two and four pounds.

The TAC A1 features a folding AR compatible stock made of aluminum with a steel hinge. Stock spacers for the end user to get an optimum length of pull are included in the package. The butt plate and cheek piece are adjustable to further ensure proper fit.

A hammer forged Sako barrel with a removable muzzle compensator is utilized on the TAC A1. Available chamberings include a .260 Remington, a 6.5mm Creedmoor and a .308 Winchester. A proprietary ten round magazine completes the package.

CZ-USA
(cz-usa.com)

CZ (Ceska Zbrojovka) is one of the world's premier firearm manufacturers and enjoys a solid reputation for turning out quality firearms. I've owned a CZ-85 for over 25 years and it has cycled thousands of rounds without a single stoppage. Despite their reputation for excellence, CZ pistols have never attracted a great deal of attention from US law enforcement. The new CZ P-10C may, in fact, be a game changer.

Like many contemporary self-loaders,

Three different backstraps are included with the new CZ P-10 C.

the CZ P-10C is a striker-fired design. It does, however, have one of the best triggers of the breed. The trigger was designed to minimize creep and stacking and boasts a short, positive reset. Trigger break is achieved with the application of four to 4.5 pounds of rearward pressure which is a bit lighter than most of the competition.

The grip of the CZ P-10C should please most potential users and the pistol is a natural pointer. Three different backstraps are included to optimize hand fit. The fiber reinforced polymer frame keeps weight down to a trim 26 ounces.

The barrel length is 4.02" with a total length of 7.3", making the P-10C ideal for uniform or plainclothes carry. Metal three dot sights are standard. Both 9mm and .40S&W pistols will be offered.

The Colt Cobra® has returned.

Colt® Defense, LLC
(colt.com)

Most of us equate Colt with 1911 pistols and AR-15 rifles and that wouldn't be too far off the mark.

The big news at Colt is the reintroduction of a high quality snub revolver. The new Colt Cobra® resurrects a name from the past and applies it to an entirely new package. Crafted entirely of stainless steel, this design represents a new sheet of music and differs significantly from the Cobra of old. For starters, the trigger geometry and stroke are different from my old Detective Special. I also suspect the grip frame is longer as well. A fiber-optic front sight and set of rubber grips complete the package.

One advantage which Colt snubs held over their primary competitor was the fact that they held six, rather than five, cartridges in a package which was only nominally larger. In a hideout gun, I feel a bit more confident with six rounds of .38 Special +P than any .380ACP. I'm sure plenty of others feel the same way.

FN America, LLC
(fnamerica.com)

The newest addition to the highly regarded line of FN pistols is the FNS-9 Compact FDE. Designed for concealed carry, qualities mirror those of the earlier matte black copy. The difference, of course, is that the latest version wears a durable FDE (Flat Dark Earth) finish. Even though differences between the latest offering and the original are purely cosmetic, this FN self-loader may very well be the best striker-fired compact.

FN describes the trigger action of the FNS family as double-action, although shooting qualities are more akin to a user-friendly single-action. Two additional backstraps are included to achieve the best possible connection to the gun. Two 12 round magazines, plus a 17 round magazine with a grip extension, are included. Grip is a very subjective area, but, in my hand, the FNS-9 Compact FDE feels better than the competition. An accessory rail for the mounting of lights and lasers is molded into the frame and the slide features fore and aft cocking serrations.

The total length of the FNS-9 FDE is 6.7". At 23.4 ounces empty, the size and weight of this package should not give you away when dressed in casual clothing.

FN also debuted a number of modern sporting rifles bearing the FN 15™ name and featuring the newly designed FN handguard with M-LOK® technology

(which is a unique accessory mounting system). The FN 15 Series feature updated models like the FN 15 DMR II and the Tactical Carbine II in both 5.56x45mm and .300AAC Blackout.

The RP9 from Remington® offers an 18+1 round capacity.

Remington®
(remington.com)

In recent years, Remington has attempted to move beyond the 870 shotguns and bolt-action rifles they have traditionally marketed to law enforcement. For 2017, Big Green has jumped into the deep end of the pool with the introduction of a brand-new service size pistol.

The RP9 is a polymer frame, striker-fired service pistol with an 18+1 capacity. Although this is a round or two more than similar competitive designs, Remington claims the RP9 has a smaller grip circumference and that it will fit 95% of all potential users. An optimized grip angle and undercut trigger guard help get you on target and minimize felt recoil and muzzle flip.

Trigger pull on the RP9 is designed to fall between 5.5 and seven pounds, with a short, tactile reset. The slide and barrel are given a black PVD finish for maximum durability. The sights are of the familiar three dot pattern and are draft adjustable for windage.

The LCP® II's new trigger system utilizes a blade safety.

Ruger® Firearms
(ruger.com/le)

Ruger has had a very busy year, introducing multiple firearms to the market. New entries of interest to law enforcement include the LCP® II in .380ACP and the American Compacts.

The LCP II is a tad larger than the original LCP and holds an extra round. The most notable difference between the LCP II and the original is a user-friendly trigger. A short, crisp, single-action pull is utilized in the LCP II which will, no doubt, make the hits come a little easier. The sights also have been improved on the upgraded version. A larger gripping surface and aggressive texturing represent other significant improvements.

Ruger is also turning out chopped and channeled versions of their American service size pistol. The polymer frame, striker-fired American Compact is available in 9mm and .45ACP. Both length and height have been reduced from the original American. These pistols feature the same trigger action as their larger cousins, with a short take-up and a positive reset. The slides are crafted from stainless steel, while the frames are rendered from high performance, glass filled nylon. The magazine capacity of the

(sigsauer.com)

In a few short years, SIG SAUER has grown from the manufacturer of a few quality pistols to a complete systems provider. In addition to pistols, SIG is now turning out air guns, rifles, SMGs, ammunition, and optics.

During the SHOT Show, word came out that SIG had secured the contract from the United States Army to provide the new service pistol. After an extensive process, the Army felt that the SIG P320's modular platform best suited their needs in the 21st century. It's difficult to take issue with their choice.

The US Army has recently selected the SIG SAUER® Model P320 to replace the M9 service pistol currently in use.

The P320 line continues to grow by leaps and bounds and there seems to be something available for most every need. The units caught my attention were the P320 RX full-size and compact models. These pistols combine striker-fired modularity with a slide mounted reflex sight. In essence, one gets a state-of-the-art pistol with a factory mounted ROMEO1 optic. This combination can go a long way to improving anybody's game.

The ROMEO1 optic utilizes a three MOA red dot which has multiple intensity settings.

The ROMEO1 has a molded glass aspheric lens with high performance coatings. Its three MOA red dot has multiple intensity settings and helps get you on target in every conceivable light condition. This innovative sight can be instantly put into play on the draw using Motion Activated Illumination (MOTAC™).

Is this fantasy or future shock? Back in the day, we wondered if autopistols would ever replace our revolvers. That, of course, came to pass a generation ago. Weapon mounted lights on duty pistols are yet another technological advancement we have witnessed. Safariland®, the largest manufacturer of police holsters, is currently working out some duty designs for pistols with red dot optics. Stay tuned for the next big thing!

Smith & Wesson®
(smith-wesson.com)

The big news at Smith & Wesson was an upgrade to the popular M&P® Series of pistols. These enhanced pistols do indeed have a leg up over the original version and the new M&P is sure to please.

Most notable is an improved trigger. The new M2.0™ variant features a crisp, light trigger with a tactile, audible reset. In the past, this was one area where S&W took a backseat to their primary competitor. Four interchangeable backstraps are now provided to achieve the best possible fit. The grip frame is aggressively textured for a positive hold and additional cuts have been made in the forward part of the slide for manual manipulation. Chamberings include 9mm, .40S&W, and .45ACP, either with, or without, an ambidextrous thumb safety. End users can choose between a matte black or a Flat Dark Earth (FDE) finish.

Despite the overwhelming domination of autopistols, snub revolvers are still very popular with law enforcement officers. Nobody makes more variations of small frame snubs than Smith & Wesson and their Performance Center® Model 642 Enhanced Action is top-shelf. This Centennial variant from the Performance Center combines a snag-resistant, enclosed hammer DAO action which is considerably smoother than other snubs. The SAINT™ includes innovations like its Accu-Tite receiver mating system.

Springfield Armory® (springfield-armory.com)

In late 2016, Springfield Armory introduced the SAINT™, an AR-15 pattern 5.56mm carbine, loaded with desirable features. I would be hard-pressed to find another carbine in its price range which includes so many features.

The SAINT package includes Springfield Armory's Accu-Tite receiver mating system, along with a 16 inch chrome moly vanadium barrel. The barrel itself has a 1:8 twist to stabilize a wide range of bullet weights. The SAINT utilizes a mid length gas system and a heavy tungsten buffer. Its trigger sports micro polished and nickel boron treated components for smooth operation and optimum pull weight.

The butt stock, pistol grip and Key Mod handguard are supplied by Bravo Company. A flat top receiver for the mounting of optics is utilized and a flip-up rear aperture sight is included. The fixed front sight is classic A2 style.

Another notable new entry from Springfield Armory is the 9mm EMP® Lightweight Champion with Concealed Carry Contour. The EMP Series of pistols might be best described as a slightly reduced size 1911 built around the 9mm cartridge. The distance from the front to the rear of the grip frame is less than a standard 1911.

The new Carry Contour model has a four inch barrel, aluminum alloy frame and a bevel at the bottom of the mainspring housing to aid concealment. Sighting equipment consists of a low profile combat rear mated to a fiber-optic front. Three, nine round magazines are included with the pistol.

Walther Arms (waltherarms.com)

Late last year, Walther Arms announced the availability of their "value priced" 9mm pistol, named the Creed. This new offering features a reinforced polymer frame, nonslip grip texturing, and a precocked double-action trigger system with a bobbed hammer for a no snag draw. With an ambidextrous magazine release, low profile steel three dot sights, and front and rear cocking serrations on the slide, the Creed comes with two 16 round, 9mm magazines. The overall length is 7.3" and an empty magazine weight of 26.6 ounces.

Different Strokes

It is certainly tough for any upstart company to establish itself in this industry, particularly when you're competing against established players who turn out a good product. The key, of course, is to have something unique which fills a need. I don't know if any of the following products have that kind of appeal, but they were interesting, to say the least.

The Hudson H9 (hudsonmfg.com) might be best described as some sort of cross-pollination between a 1911 and a GLOCK. The trigger is very 1911-like, but the H9 is a striker-fired gun. The shooting qualities are indeed nice, but it has a steep hill to climb to compete with the established players.

Another innovation is the Maxim 9 from SilencerCo, LLC (silencerco.com). The Maxim® 9 is billed as the world's first integrally suppressed 9mm pistol which can be placed in a holster. I doubt if we'll be seeing too many in duty rigs, but the concept has merit for special teams.

I'm a longtime proponent of backup guns for police and, should things get ugly, I want to access a hideout chambered for a service cartridge. How about a .45ACP? Heizer Defense (heizerdefense.com) is now turning out the PK045 which they claim to be the "thinnest pocket .45 semi-auto pistol." I bet it's a handful, but, in time of need, I doubt if you'll notice.

Vigilant Solutions License Plate Recognition (LPR) Adds "Extra Set of Eyes" to Improve Sobriety Checkpoint Operation

A Midwest police department which deployed Vigilant's License Plate Recognition (LPR) in a sobriety checkpoint operation reports improved officer safety and efficiency, as well as 28 enforcement actions for offenses including drug possession and operating while intoxicated among others. The agency has asked not to be named in the release, but is willing to speak to other law enforcement agencies about its experiences with the system.

A sergeant with the agency commented, "We've had the LPR system from Vigilant Solutions for roughly six months and it is proving to be a valuable tool on many fronts. One such use is at sobriety checkpoints. As an example, we recently set up a checkpoint selected as the result of a traffic study."

LPRs use a camera system which takes pictures of license plates and uses Optical Character Recognition (OCR) to convert the image into text which the LPR system software can check against law enforcement databases. The system does not look up information on individuals – it only sees the letters and numbers on the plate. So each plate, quite simply, is read and compared to the law enforcement databases. If there is a match, then the officer visually confirms the match and follows agency policy regarding proper patrol response.

The Sergeant continued, "At 10:20 p.m., after training everyone and setting up the location, we began directing six vehicles at a time into the checkpoint. When the checkpoint was full, we allowed vehicles to pass by the checkpoint so as not to disrupt traffic and to minimize wait times for drivers. The LPR system read the plates passing through the checkpoint and compared them against a number of law enforcement databases. This served both an officer safety role, and improved the effectiveness of our checkpoint by calling attention to vehicles which may have otherwise gone unnoticed. The LPR system ensures fair and consistent enforcement, as it only sees the characters of the license plate – not the type or condition of the vehicle, nor the driver. The system also allowed us to scan all vehicles allowed to bypass the checkpoint against the same databases, so that, in the event of a hit, we could notify a patrol car downstream of the checkpoint to stop the vehicle."

"We ended the checkpoint at 2:35 a.m., at which point, it was tallied that we had encountered 488 vehicles through the checkpoint and over 1,000 others which bypassed the checkpoint, but were still checked because we had the LPR system. This four hour operation resulted in 28 enforcement actions. The enforcement actions included 22 of the vehicles being towed, as well as a number of arrests, including drug-related offenses (possession of controlled substances and drug paraphernalia), operating while intoxicated, driving while suspended, unlicensed drivers, expired plates, and warrants," said the Sergeant.

About Vigilant Solutions

Vigilant Solutions' easy to use interface was designed by former detectives who have combined analytics with LPR and facial recognition to generate more leads. This allows sharing real-time data with over 1,000 agencies, as well as access to a commercial LPR database of more than five billion detections. # Developing the Next Generation of Police Leadership

What are some of the best practices which commanders can utilize to foster millennial officers' educational aspirations?

Christa M Miller

It may be an understatement to say that American policing has become exponentially more complex in the decade and a half since 9/11. A greater emphasis on local level homeland security has gone hand in hand with higher demand for better response tactics toward the mentally ill, minority communities and other groups. Agencies need officers who can think their way through situations, rather than rely on traditional training which may, or may not, have prepared them for nuances in behavior or communication.

This preparation can come from a well thought-out college degree program, but many officers struggle to obtain degrees. Not only is college expensive, it can also be difficult to work around shift schedules, court appearances and family commitments. Yet, the better educated officers are, the better position they're in to become their agencies' next generation of leaders.

Tuition reimbursement programs help, but even for departments which lack the budget to offer them, it's possible – and even preferable – for police supervisors and commanders to support officers' pursuit of higher education through cultural and professional support.

To do that, it's important to understand four main principles. First, academy training is not a substitute for education. Second, academics have their own limitations, making the right degree program important. Third, commanders need to keep an open mind about officers' ideas for how to use technology to lead. And, finally, college can help put young officers' job experiences into perspective, refining and shaping their leadership for the next generation.

Academy Training Is Not Education

Bud Levin, a professor of psychology at Virginia's Blue Ridge Community College, a visiting scholar with the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI)'s Quantico-based training division, and a police futurist, emphasizes that academies teach officers more to reduce civil liability than to do their jobs well. "Training delivers only the nuts and bolts of delivery, with a problem-solving curriculum which goes by the book. Instructors read from an outline approved by attorneys so they can defend the officer's actions, but this isn't how people get involved in solving problems."

Rick Myers, Chief of Police in Newport News (Virginia), agrees that the academy may offer the "mechanics" of policing, but can't train softer skills, "how to have compassion and empathy, how to be a problem solver, to maintain personal and professional integrity, an ethical manner, and good interpersonal relations – or how to train the opposite of those things out," he says.

"Filling out a report, writing a ticket, understanding the elements of crime, hitting a target, etc. don't require a specific degree," adds Myers. "Being able to study and learn, to be inquisitive and a good communicator are more important to officers coming into the job. Most bona fide degree programs will offer those."

Academic Institutions

Have Their Own Limitations

On the other hand, Myers acknowledges, "Simply being well educated is no guarantee of success or competency as a cop." Some specialties can be developed over time without any college coursework, albeit with "exhaustive" training. With some very technical areas of policing, he says, training may in fact be more important than academic overviews.

Indeed, the right degree program is important. Levin notes that, in many schools, professors and students are far from one another's realities. "Many institutions are in the position of trying to teach people to be leaders when they don't know what to be leaders of, while most teachers don't have the context or perspective in policing they need to teach effectively," he says.

Furthermore, Levin says that schools may or may not teach what officers need to know about particular issues within their own communities. "No one size fits all," he says. Even so, when institutions react to what they believe politicians and voters in their communities want for students and education, they may, for example, adopt policies and procedures based on research done in urban environments – even though their own community may be suburban or rural. "What works in Sheboygan may not [work] in Madison," says Levin, "and the instructors won't necessarily know why."

Understand What's Shaping Tomorrow's Police Leaders

The short version: In today's environment, following rules and best practices doesn't necessarily prepare officers for future scenarios they will face, but neither does any given degree. And so, says Levin, it's important to hire with an officer's career ladder in mind, rather than hiring to fill a present-day slot; keeping in mind what you want your agency's future leaders to look like; and helping them to develop a career which fulfills that vision.

Myers explains that there are many different models of policing, including combat policing, community policing, intelligence-led policing, and the like.

However, he adds, "In seeking labels, we tend to overlook the fact that the business we're in is policing. No one single "model" of policing can be universally applied. The reality is, what officers do out on the street is highly situational and requires adaptation; therefore, depending on the scenario, some, none or all of those models may come into play."

Myers points to the shooting attacks in San Bernardino, Orlando and Colorado Springs as examples of the need for adaptation. Even so, he says, "Sometimes, people misconstrue that as to mean that we don't ever have to engage in combative type tactics, when, in reality, while contemporary community or problem oriented policing is considered 'best practice' for today's world, police need to be able to immediately switch into combat orientation in order to preserve their own or innocent citizens' lives."

In fact, an advanced education, up to and including graduate school, enables officers to use time to their advantage in a way they may not have in the field: to learn how to work through decisions. "As an officer goes up the ranks, more thorough research and critical thinking on complex topics is required," he says.

That can carry forward into critical situations. "If they're adept at practicing intellectual capacity, they can come forward and analyze things more quickly and potentially make better decisions, balancing knowledge with common sense."

How Technology Is Shaping Young Officers

Also formational for millennial officers' policing experience, of course, is technology. "High school graduates come to the workplace with a comfort and familiarity with technology that people even with degrees may find themselves unable to replicate or quite understand," says Myers. "Commanders from the baby boomer generation may be uncomfortable or unaware of some of the technology which is available now."

This is, he adds, as much generational as academic. He likens it to the technology available as he started his law enforcement career 40 years ago. "Portable radios had just begun to be issued to officers, but the old-timers didn't want to be bothered using them; they went on relying on the lightbar's exterior speakers."

Nowadays, smartphones have more computing power than the first desktop computers. Indeed, says Glen Woodbury, Director of the Center for Homeland Defense and Security (CHDS) at the Naval Postgraduate School (NPS), younger officers can be defensive about older officers' criticism of Twitter or their mobile phone usage. "They may be receiving an unfair or uninformed assessment of their use of the technologies that are second, if not first, nature to them," he says.

This lack of awareness can lead to friction between officers seeking to get the job done and older commanders who are – rightly or overly – concerned with potential negative unintended outcomes. For example, says Tim Hardiman, AVP of American Military University's Law Enforcement Outreach, "Police technology tends to be so locked down that it becomes necessary to teach investigators how to obtain and then secure the hardware they need to conduct certain investigations," such as those on the so-called "dark web," which is necessarily inaccessible through approved police channels.

In this regard, millennials' penchant for asking "why?" may be especially valuable. Hardiman, who retired from the New York City Police Department with the rank of Inspector, points out, "This isn't a toddler's 'how come?' whine, but curiosity, a genuine interest in learning how and why a way of doing this is important."

It's an outlook which, says Woodbury, enables younger officers to admit what they don't know. "Growing up with social networks and on demand information," he says, "they've learned to collaborate and seek more data as their default, so they are generally more outgoing, more open with their opinions and thoughts, and often more accepting of learning new concepts."

Indeed, says Myers, when it comes to obtaining college degrees, some specialization is critical – for example, when staffing a cybercrime unit. "You need investigators who become subject matter experts on the recovery and analysis of digital evidence who can pursue the digital footprint of crimes," he says.

If anything, the way the students go about their community involvement – using social media and related technology – makes them better prepared to use media and to lead in a way which benefits law enforcement and their communities overall. Says Heather Issvoran, Director of Strategic Communications for the CHDS, "They understand the online environment and are in a better position to help the public understand the reasoning for something without detracting from the mission."

Developing the Next Generation of Police Leaders

Technology, culture and other complications of law enforcement is driving some degree programs to explore new models which encourage critical thinking and problem solving.

Issvoran notes that, in her experience, millennial officers' interest in, and passion for, law enforcement is as strong as ever, if not stronger because these students "want to make a difference." In her view, the generational predilection toward collaboration and consensus is a positive for programs like CDHS', because it enables students to communicate much more effectively than more traditional, siloed officers and agencies. "We've really found that cross-disciplinary information sharing is much more seamless," she explains.

Creating an Environment Conducive to Learning

Myers believes there is more value in supporting higher education than not. "Clearly we are in a cycle where it's become challenging to recruit police officers," he acknowledges. "Many are struggling with vacancies. Some are reacting by eliminating their education requirement."

However, he adds, this is not a healthy long-term strategy. "When you look for a quick fix by dropping any one standard – which was the result of careful thought to start with – you may get one or two full academy classes, but over the long term, five to ten years, you can expect unintended consequences such as breakdowns in integrity issues."

The answer: Rather than lower standards, work harder to get the word out, to attract multifaceted candidates who fit those standards. Furthermore, rather than give in to the temptation to think that a degree will drive officers off to bigger departments or even the private sector, cultivate leaders who can help shape realistic policing for the 21st century.

To prevent “brain drain,” says Hardiman, it’s important to make the police department “a good place to work.” Millennials expect to have more than one job over the course of their careers, he notes, and they’re more open to changing careers as well as jobs.

In fact, says Woodbury, encouraging degree program participation is a good means of retention. “Younger people seek more information and knowledge, including how and why to look at things, and what other ways there are to look at them,” he says.

To be sure, the financial aspect of higher education is critical. Myers’ three adult children all incurred debt as part of their college experience. “The price tag is so significant that a lot of young folks face a tough choice between debt and opting to go into the workforce before completing their degree,” he says. “But, even then, police leadership can work with, and help, employees.”

Many departments, including Newport News’, have tuition assistance. Even if they cannot offer full reimbursement, they can often provide some assistance on tuition. Coupled with work schedule flexibility – which, Myers says, must support shift supervisors as well as the students themselves – this can help encourage officers to attend school.

Shift coverage is only one part of broader structural support which an agency can offer, though. “If someone disagrees with their chief that higher education support is valuable, that person can single-handedly disrupt and undermine culture,” says Myers.

His answer is to foster support from a department’s first level leadership – its shift supervisors – what he believes is the “most critical position” in an agency. “We have to be able to translate and operationalize our vision into how we work every day,” he says, noting that the Newport News Police Department brings its supervisors on a twice annual retreat to engage them in talking about their leadership.

The retreat is part of Myers’ effort to “create an organizational climate or culture that is supportive and values employees, including trying to work with them to have latitude for schedule flexibility to pursue career development, education and personal growth,” he says. “Those supervisors who embrace that will make it happen at their level.”

And this, says Levin, is imperative to policing in the 21st century. “As physical and social technologies change rapidly, expertise has a short and decreasing shelf life,” he says. “Thus, the need for officers – and the rest of us – to either resign ourselves to encroaching obsolescence or commit to becoming lifelong and independent learners.” P&SN

BUSTED!

James L. McClinton, Ph.D

Bet you can't eat just one... A woman in Washington, DC, faced charges of theft after reportedly stealing French fries from a police officer's plate at a local restaurant. Two women, whom the officer believed to be intoxicated, approached his table to begin a conversation when one began to eat fries from his plate. "I then politely asked her to not do that again because I paid for that food and she was stealing from me and she could be arrested for theft of my food," the officer wrote in a police report. The woman responded by saying, "Well, then, you might as well take me to jail," before taking a third fry. She was then arrested for second-degree theft with the stolen property listed as "French Fried Potato... quantity 3." (I want to arrest my wife every time she does that!)

Urine a lot of trouble... Pennsylvania police say a drug suspect was all wet when he urinated in his pants in the hope that it would dissolve the heroin and cocaine in his pocket. The 42-year-old man sold heroin during an undercover sting in Scranton. Police say that, when they tried to arrest him afterward, he struggled and had to be subdued. Police say he then began urinating in his pants in an attempt to dissolve the drugs. Police say he was unsuccessful and they found five small bags of heroin, four small bags of cocaine and $3,000 in cash. (Police: "You're apeein'!" Suspect: "No, sir, I'm American.")

REAL STORIES OF GENUINE ABSURDITY

Morgan Stanley has nothing on this guy's investment strategy...

After winning a scratch off lottery prize last year of $3 million in Waycross, Georgia, a 45-year-old man must surely have thought the "odds" were with him all the way – because he soon flipped the money into a Georgia methamphetamine gang. Unfortunately, the "bet" went sour and now he faces decades in prison after he pleaded guilty to drug trafficking and firearms violation. He was busted after he and his associates were found with $1 million worth of meth and a load of guns. (Well, at least he didn't do something really stupid like donating his winnings to a political action committee.)

Every now and then, a "Happy Meal®" fails to live up to its name... A man's search for love in Casper, Wyoming, pointed to an online ad. He contacted the "advertiser" and arranged to meet a hooker for sex. The man negotiated with the woman and worked out a deal to pay for his romantic encounter with a Quarter Pounder® with cheese and a medium order of fries. Unfortunately, his "romantic" encounter had actually been arranged with an undercover police officer and not a real hooker. He was arrested when he showed up for his tryst, holding a McDonald's® bag in his clenched fist. (You don't deserve a break today!)

Smear campaign gets out of hand... A 32-year-old woman burst into what she believed was a "Donald Trump for President" rally in Amherst Junction, Wisconsin, and shouted at the people about her hatred for Trump. The group asked her to leave, but after a man in the parking lot spotted her spreading peanut butter on vehicles, they called police. The event wasn't a Trump rally – it was a meeting of the Tomorrow River Conservation Club. The complaint said she admitted to drinking beer that night and blew a .218% alcohol level on a breathalyzer. Police say she smeared peanut butter on 30 cars using a "family-size jar of low sodium, creamy, Natural Jif®." (Because low sodium is better for your car...)

How cheesy!... Near Youngstown, Ohio, police have accused a woman of selling sex for $60 and some nachos. Beaver Township Police arrested the 36-year-old woman during an undercover operation. An officer texted the woman after seeing an online advertisement for sex services. The department says she first wanted $50 and some nachos and later raised the price to $60. A spokesman reports that, when the undercover officer later met the woman in the parking lot of a Mexican restaurant, she asked if he had the extra money and her nachos. The woman was charged with solicitation. (It makes me wonder what she'd do for a Klondike® bar.) P&SN
