2018 Dodge Charger Pursuit comes with our exclusive, no-cost Officer Protection Package (OPP).

With ParkSense® Rear Park Assist System¹, engineered to support officers' situational awareness when parked and working inside their vehicle, the Officer Protection Package was made to keep officers safer in their vehicles. Using a rear-facing camera and sensors, this technology was made to detect movement behind, giving officers an extra set of eyes in the back of their heads. When motion is detected, OPP provides warning in all or some of the following ways: alert chimes sound, lights flash, windows roll up, doors lock and images automatically appear on the vehicle's Uconnect® interactive screen. The Officer Protection Package was designed specifically for the police officer in mind.

...AND NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH

I was an investigator for 22 years in homicide, working death scenes of all kinds, but I've never been to a scene littered with the bodies of innocent schoolkids.

I'm thankful for that. And, so, on the very day I am writing this latest column, it is the same day that the students, faculty and staff of Marjorie Stoneman Douglas are returning to school for the first time since the shooting. I dedicate this column not only to them, but to my brothers and sisters who had to work that scene – the homicide detectives, uniform personnel and crime scene techs who had to carefully document each body, each spent casing and projectile, and each bloodstain. They will never forget what they saw that day and well into the night, working that horrific scene.

I remember after the Columbine shooting, some local journalist asked the question, "Could it happen here?" I always thought of it as a dumb question because those Columbine victims were our kids, too. Either way, Mr. Journalist, question answered. The Columbine kids and the Douglas kids, they're all ours; they're all "here."

The battle is on again, but this time in a much more robust and intense way. The political haranguing and volleying about gun control and the NRA is at an all-time high. I can only hope, as an optimist, that both "sides" will learn enough about their "opponent" that there are no more "sides" and that, as one of the Douglas parents said so well, "We are not a Democratic party or a Republican party; we are a human party."

Although I'm not a big gun enthusiast, I like firearms, I respect them and I carried one for 27 years. I've got three guns in my house, one of them being my former duty weapon. The other I bought because it's more concealable and the third one is a .30-06 bolt-action rifle given to me by a client. I have no political axe to grind, although I do feel that the vast majority of citizens are responsible gun owners and shouldn't lose the right to protect their homes and loved ones. Yes, we certainly need to find a way to keep guns out of the hands of demented and dangerous people, but this is a difficult task, one which will not be affected by the banning of anything, least of all the outlawing of the AR-15. Guns were just as easy to access in the 1960s and 1970s; yet, the only mass shooting of the '60s was the 1966 Texas Tower shooting in Dallas, when 17 were killed by a sniper (with a bolt-action rifle) before he was taken out by police. There were NO mass shootings in the 1970s, a decade which, ironically, saw a major increase in violent crime in general. Then, in 1982, the wave of mass shootings seemed to begin and, sadly, continues unabated. This tells me that our gun problem hasn't gotten worse; our people problem has. Larger segments of our citizenry have, for various reasons, become more volatile; less patient; and, sad to say, less sane.

No Easy Answers

This most current tragedy, as most of us know, is both a school security problem and a mental illness problem. Yes, this all overlaps with the accessibility of firearms, but I believe there are some things we can do right now to secure our schools. For example, physical upgrading, including fences, access checkpoints, better camera technology with early warning (geofence) capability, and recruiting help from retired law enforcement personnel will go a long way in solving the problem – for schools anyway. It is possible that someone could breach such measures, but it's less likely. The cowards who have carried out not only school shootings, but other attacks such as the Pulse nightclub and Las Vegas shootings, have always looked for the path of least resistance. The experts who have studied mass shootings will tell you that the shooter knows he is up against time constraints and that he won't take the time to try and penetrate a solidly secured school compound, especially when law enforcement is on the scene.

I'm not a fan of arming teachers. More things can go wrong than can go right when teachers have firearms on their persons or in their desks day-to-day. Some schools have hoodlums attending class and we shouldn't dupe ourselves into thinking that they won't concoct schemes to get ahold of that gun, either in the class or when the teacher goes home. There's also the possibility of an unpredictable teacher losing his (or her) composure with an unruly student or during a violent fight, and brandishing his (or her) gun in a crowded classroom. The chances of an innocent kid catching a round are too high for my liking. No, secure the premises, intelligently and vigorously. This will work better.

In my column which ran in the November/December 2017 edition of P&SN (shortly after the Las Vegas shooting), I talked about defective people. This is the most vexing problem facing society today. We must find a way for our government entities and medical professionals to develop the ability to identify those with serious disorders so they can get treatment and be prohibited from being around firearms. This task is probably the most difficult to achieve because it is so complex. There are legal issues about privacy and mental health, and these issues represent a huge mountain to climb. Something, though, must be done because the shooters in all of these cases, by their very actions, are deeply disturbed people. Still, climbing this mountain will not be the one and only solution because there are many mentally ill people who have not been identified; will never have interacted with mental health professionals; and are simply "out there," barely functioning among us, until something causes them to snap. As it stands now in Florida, for example, a "background check" conducted during a firearm sale will identify only two factors: 1) if the person is a convicted felon, and 2) if they have been adjudicated by a court of law as mentally ill. Other than that, someone can be "Baker Acted" – taken into protective custody for involuntary treatment and held for up to 72 hours – if they are a danger to themselves and others, but Baker Acts are NOT registered anywhere for background checks to know about them.

Disturbing as it is, this type of tragedy will happen again. Somewhere, walking the ground on one of our 50 states is a deranged person, waiting, watching, listening, and processing everything we are arguing about as a provocation. We might not see it at a school, but, next time, it could be at a shopping mall or some transit station, or at a public park. We can't secure everything, so the answer is this: We have to find some way to get better – mentally speaking – as a society. There's no law or Constitutional amendment which will help facilitate that, but maybe Mother Teresa had the right idea, "If you want world peace, go home and love your children."

Simplistic? Maybe. Idealistic? Maybe. But, if you think about it, it is something we all can do now without anyone passing a law. If everyone really could do that, wow, things would be different. P&SN

Faster Ballistics Analysis Available with BallisticSearch™

BallisticSearch, from Vigilant Solutions, is a new system which provides faster and more efficient cartridge case analysis. The BallisticSearch system includes portable image capture hardware, cartridge case capture software and ballistics comparison technology. The solution enables agencies to quickly compare evidence from crime scenes to help generate more investigative leads and potentially identify more suspects and the firearms they use.

BallisticSearch is designed for analyzing ballistic evidence in both a 2D and 3D format and can process evidence in minutes, while other systems can take hours. Faster analysis can have a huge impact on reducing backlogs and, with faster comparisons and potential links established, agencies can generate strong investigative leads, boosting their ability to solve crimes more quickly; in some cases, right from the crime scene.

“Hey, Boss, Where Are We Going?”

Michael Carpenter

As a law enforcement leader, do you “know the way”?

There are many definitions of the word “leadership” and there are many books to read and many Web pages to click on to learn about this skill. But, let’s keep this simple and look at a very basic (but very powerful) definition of leadership which I like: “A leader is one who knows the way, goes the way and shows the way.” (John C. Maxwell)

Where Are You Going?

Do you know the mission of your agency? Do you know the goals of your agency which are designed to achieve that mission? Do you see “down the road” where you want your agency or your shift or your employees to go? This is called having a “vision.”

In policing, there are many crises and problems which pop up unexpectedly on a day-to-day basis which need to be dealt with. Who has time to plan ahead for where you want to be one year from now or five years from now? Successful leaders make the time and know the importance of setting this vision. It would be the same as if you were planning a cross-country vacation with your family. You’d find the time to plan out the best route. You wouldn’t just jump in your car and start driving!

You need to know where you are going to have a successful vacation and you need to know where you are going to be a successful supervisor. Successful supervisors and managers have to know their mission (where they are going) and know the role their shift or employees play in accomplishing the mission. After all, you can’t lead your people somewhere when you don’t know where you are going. And, you have to know where you are and where your employees are right now so that you can be sure you are on the right road.

In our vacation analogy, you’d need a map, an understanding as to where you are now and a knowledge of where you want to go based in part on where you are now. In law enforcement, you need to understand your mission and the goals and objectives of your agency and you need to know how to get your employees to that destination.

Share the Vision

To gain commitment, you must share your vision with your people. You must share all that you have learned about your agency’s mission, goals and objectives (or where you want your shift or your employees to go). “Here is where we are now and here is where we are going” is a good start.

But, perhaps, some will be skeptical. You must convince them that this will be a positive and worthwhile ride. It has been said that leadership is getting others to do what you want them to do because they want to do it. Once you share your vision, they’ll think through the whole thing. Are you the one they should follow? Do you have the knowledge and experience to get them there safely? What happens when they get there?

In our vacation analogy, your family members might be asking (or thinking), “Is it worth all of the time and effort to get to that destination?” “What do I get out of this trip?” “Do I trust the old car to get us there?” Your employees will be asking (or thinking) the same thing, “Is it worth all the time and effort to accomplish these goals or is it a waste of time?” “What’s in it for me?” “Do I trust the bosses to get us there?” “How loyal and supportive will the boss be if we follow him on this jaunt?”

It is not simply enough for you to know where you are going. Once you finally know where your agency or your shift or your employees should go, you have to develop the second component of leadership called “shared vision.” (In the definition of leadership previously mentioned, this would be “goes the way” and “shows the way.”)

What are the goals of your agency or your unit or your employees? If you can truly articulate them, then you should be able to share them with your people. They may not be entirely sure of what the goals are – or even whether, or not, there are any. It is the equivalent of not telling your family where they are going on vacation – just get in the car and let me drive! Maybe a little family involvement might help in planning the family vacation? If you let your employees share in the development and defining of their goals, they will be much more willing to share the responsibility for attaining those goals which they partially own.

To have a successful vacation, you usually need everybody to agree on the destination. At your agency, you need a commitment from your people that they will follow you to their destination. Without developing their willingness to follow you, you will merely take a car ride toward a destination which nobody knows and they may wonder where they are going and really not care when they get there.

Thank You!

Share the Commitment

Sharing the vision and the commitment involves...sharing. Open communication is critical to any supervisor in any agency. If you have information which will affect your unit or affect your employees, then share it with your people. When the information comes from you, at least they will be sure that they are getting the correct information, untainted by the "rumor mill" which is active in so many departments. As a supervisor, you may be among the first to learn of impending promotions, changes in assignments or a host of other information about the department and its operations. Granted, some of that information should rightfully be kept confidential, but much of it is, or will soon be, common knowledge. Through this sharing of factual information, you will build up a mutual trust over time. Then, even when your employees hear the latest "scoop" from the rumor mill, they will be more likely to come to you and say, "Hey, boss, is this true?" That's when you'll know you are a successful leader.

If the sharing of day-to-day information is important, then so is the sharing of learning. "Knowledge is power," reads an old adage. When you share what you know or have recently learned, you are sharing your power with your subordinates. Conversely, your people have knowledge they can share with you and their peers. All that is needed for this sharing to occur is the opportunity and atmosphere to do so. Take time to talk with each other, but, more importantly, take time to listen to each other.

Everyone must do their job to make the department work. The chief must get the resources from the politicians to run the department. The command staff must administer those resources effectively to keep the department on the right road. The mid-level managers must oversee a variety of units and put out any operational "fires" which crop up. The supervisors must make sure the day-to-day things get done and the officers do their jobs to fulfill their policing duties. Effective policing is a team effort. Be sure you share the effort of running the team with all of the other members and make sure that they perform their share of the work for the success of the department.

Of course, despite the importance of sharing, there are a few things which successful police supervisors should NOT share with employees. These can include strictly confidential conversations; "need to know" information; certain personnel information, including medical records or discipline matters; and rumors.

And, of course, no police supervisor should ever share failure. If your shift or your employees fail to meet its clearly defined goals, it's solely your responsibility. After all, you are the one "driving the car."

Having a vision, sharing that vision and developing a commitment for that vision – leadership is that simple. P&SN

Training for Off-Duty and Plainclothes Carry

Todd Fletcher

Danger shows up when you least expect it. Whether you're in a small town, a rural area, or in the big city, the assumption that "you'll know what to do" when trouble arrives is just wishful thinking.

After recognizing a training deficiency about eight years ago, I began teaching a class called, "Off-Duty & Concealed Carry Tactics for Law Enforcement." The class covered equipment selection, marksmanship and live-fire exercises specific to the types of situations law enforcement officers could face. To this day, I am still amazed by the number of officers who tell me this was the first time they had ever trained using everyday clothing and concealed carry equipment.

While frustrating, this is hardly a surprise. In more than 23 years as a law enforcement officer, I have never received department sponsored training for off-duty or plainclothes carry. I suspect it's the same for the vast majority of law enforcement officers. Since this is our reality, and we need to be active participants in our own defense, it is our responsibility to take up the slack and seek out the necessary training for ourselves. With that, let's take a look at some of the training issues concerning off-duty and plainclothes carry for law enforcement professionals.

The Issue

The majority of law enforcement firearms training consists of going to the range wearing traditional duty gear, using traditional duty weapons and performing drills primarily designed for uniformed patrol. But, those of us in plainclothes assignments, such as administrative or investigative positions, are missing out on relevant training opportunities. Many departments authorize and encourage officers to carry off-duty; however, very few departments provide training on the use of smaller, more compact handguns and the associated equipment commonly used when not in uniform.

Equipment Concerns

Designing an effective training program is going to be somewhat dependent on the gear we choose to use. The type of handgun, holster, magazine carrier, and cover garments provide a basic roadmap for our training needs.

When it comes to handgun choice, there are many good options available for plainclothes carry. Both semiautomatics and revolvers can be effective choices – depending on your operating environment. As law enforcement officers, we train using full-size duty guns. Because of this, for consistency and ease of training, it's generally a good idea to select a concealed carry handgun which utilizes the same operating system as your duty gun. Since these smaller handguns are more difficult to shoot well, we should take advantage of the training which we already perform using similar full-size guns.

Another important consideration is that, although smaller and lighter handguns are easier to conceal and more comfortable to carry, they also have less grip area. For those of you with giant paws, these will scarcely leave room for your ring finger, let alone your little finger. When your little finger isn't part of your grip and the overall weight of the handgun is significantly lighter, there will be greater muzzle flip during recoil – resulting in less control and slower follow-up shots. This brings us right back to our training issue.

There are numerous holsters available for off-duty and concealed carry use. Many are suitable in design, function and durability for plainclothes carry. Some may be better than others depending on the context, individual preferences and the environment where they are used. Inside the WaistBand (IWB), Outside the WaistBand (OWB), ankle holsters, pocket holsters, appendix carry, and many other holster types are available. Whatever style you choose, the holster must be comfortable enough to wear on a daily basis. If not, you eventually won't use it and, perhaps, not carry at all.

Belt mounted holsters commonly fit into two categories: OWB and IWB. OWB holsters are generally more familiar to officers. They also keep the handgun further away from the body, making them more comfortable. From a shooting perspective, OWB holsters allow for better access to the grip allowing for an unimpeded draw. The downside is that OWB holsters can be less concealable.

IWB holsters are more concealable and can be worn with a wide variety of clothing options. These holsters tend to “print” less – reducing the obvious bulge caused by a cover garment draping over your holster and handgun. The drawback is that the holster and handgun can press against your body and rub against (and irritate) your skin. The tight fit can also make it more difficult to obtain your shooting grip. Again, this is why training becomes so important.

When it comes to cover garments, there is a plethora of clothing options available. Fashion choices include a wide variety of vests and shirts specifically designed to allow quick access to handguns, pants with built-in holsters and undergarments designed for concealed carry. For most situations, clothing which doesn't scream “Cop!” is going to be your best choice. Don't forget the suspension system – a quality belt designed to hold the weight of a holster and handgun will make carrying a concealed handgun much more comfortable and secure. When you invest in a quality holster, make sure you buy at least one quality belt specifically designed for concealed carry. Your handgun will be more secure, and your hips and back will thank you.

Marksmanship and Tactics

Once you settle on a handgun, a holster and clothing options, it's time to begin training with these choices. Since using new and unfamiliar equipment increases the risks of a mishap, it is best to begin training with your concealment equipment using dry fire drills. This is especially important when it comes to holstering due to the increased chances of unintentionally muzzling yourself. Before you begin, remove all live ammunition from your training area. Ensure your pistol is empty and then check it again. Once you've confirmed your pistol is unloaded, you can safely begin dry fire practice.

It's important to spend time doing both a two-handed and a one-handed draw. Don't forget to use each of your holsters, spare magazine carriers and clothing options. If you opted for at least one IWB holster, you will need to work drawing from under a concealment shirt with one- and two-handed draws. Don't forget to practice two-handed and one-handed holstering, too. Keep in mind, when using concealment gear, there are a lot of good reasons to be fast coming out of the holster, but few reasons to try to be fast back to the Plainclothes officers assigned to administrative or investigative positions need to be proficient at accessing their handgun from under a jacket or vest.

Once you're comfortable with your concealment gear in a dry fire environment, it's time to hit the live-fire range for marksmanship work. With smaller handguns, your shooting platform and trigger skills become even more important. Since you have less grip area, you will need to focus on stabilizing the gun as much as possible during the trigger press.

After you've become familiar with applying fundamental marksmanship skills using the smaller handgun, you should run some practice drills simulating circumstances which you could reasonably expect to encounter while carrying concealed. Drawing from the holster, reduced time constraints, reloading, target transitions, communicating, and positional shooting need to be addressed. Train to draw and shoot one-handed while simulating pushing a loved one away from danger. Or, simulate pulling them behind you in order to shield them from danger.

Reloading smaller handguns leads to another set of factors we normally don't think about when using our full-size duty guns. The smaller grip area of our concealed carry guns can make dropping an empty magazine more challenging. It's not unusual for larger hands to hinder the empty magazine from dropping free of the magazine well. And, slamming home a fresh magazine can lead to a wakeup call when your hand gets pinched between the frame and the new magazine.

It's also essential to invest some of your training time deploying our law enforcement credentials to prevent the tragedy of "blue-on-blue" shootings. Even when working a plainclothes assignment, if you get involved in an arrest or a shooting, responding officers may not recognize you out of uniform. This is even more critical if something occurs outside of your normal duty area. When you're out of town, no one will recognize you as a police professional, so you need to behave accordingly.

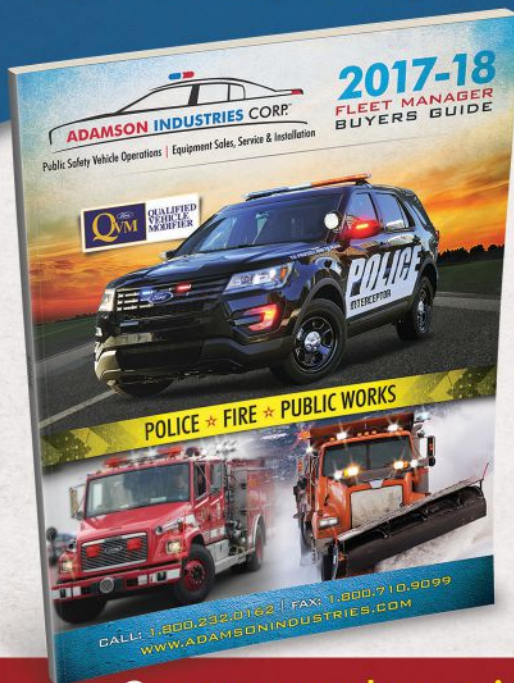

Here's a partial list of topics for training off-duty and plainclothes concealed carry: drawing from under a jacket or vest; drawing from under a shirt; two-handed draw; one-handed draw; two-handed holstering; one-handed holstering; applying fundamental marksmanship skills; one-handed shooting; empty/slide-lock reloads; tactical reloads; multiple targets; positional shooting; shooting from cover; developing speed and combat accuracy; and deploying our LE credentials after engaging.

Conclusion

In today's world, law enforcement officers should be carrying off-duty whenever, and wherever, possible. To responsibly carry in plain clothes, we need to invest in the proper equipment, clothing and training. Even if agencies fail to allocate the time or money to train officers to carry in plain clothes, we need to take responsibility for our own well-being and train for this reality. We owe it to our friends and family to be prepared for plainclothes or off-duty encounters. P&SN

The Policeman's Travelling Restaurant

Back in the year 1919, the work of police officers during large celebrations was marked by physical discomfort because of the long period of duty without any opportunity to receive snacks or meals. Taking a break was not possible because all available men were utilized simultaneously for any number of different tasks. A new feature found at a military parade in New York City was the appearance of the police department's new travelling restaurant which preceded the parade by over an hour and distributed sandwiches, coffee and apples to police officers on duty along the street. The truck worked from 6:30 a.m. until late at night under the direction of a lieutenant and five policemen. The existence of this restaurant truck was due entirely to the generosity of Deputy Police Commissioner John A. Harriss, who not only donated the refreshments, but presented the truck to the police department as well. Harriss had always been aware of the hardships suffered by patrolmen under holiday conditions and severe weather, when the irregular hours were considerably lengthened and their meals few and far between. With a view of bettering these conditions, he ordered a three ton truck, upon which a chassis was mounted. The completed lunch wagon body measured 21 feet long and seven feet wide. This was completely equipped as a travelling restaurant, having a coffee machine and pantries which insured warm meals under all conditions. There were 20 seats inside and, in cold weather, the interior was heated by radiators connected to the exhaust manifold, a feature which certainly would not pass the safety standards of today. P&SN

New Hydra-Shok® Deep

Federal Premium has announced Hydra-Shok Deep, a hard-hitting new handgun round. The original Hydra-Shok was created in 1989 in response to the FBI's request for a projectile with better terminal ballistics. The Hydra-Shok bullet produced better penetration and more consistent threat stopping expansion than other bullets at the time.

The new Hydra-Shok Deep was built to meet modern standards. Its bullet features a core design which provides up to 50 percent deeper penetration than original Hydra-Shok, and the center post has been improved so it's more robust which provides better integrity and performance through barriers. Testing shows that Hydra-Shok Deep penetrates 15" in bare ballistics gelatin which is the optimal depth, according to FBI standards.

CDP Adds Fentanyl Awareness to Training

NEWS

The Center for Domestic Preparedness (CDP) has incorporated fentanyl awareness into select training courses to address the threat of accidental exposure to the drug by first responders.

Fentanyl is a synthetic opioid which is so toxic that only two milligrams is considered a lethal dose.

First responders around the nation have encountered fentanyl in powder and liquid forms, and on discarded needles which presents a hazard from accidentally inhaling the opioid or being stuck by a needle.

The CDP's fentanyl lecture focuses on preventative measures responders need to take to protect themselves from exposure and contamination and includes a fact sheet for future reference.

Currently, the fentanyl lecture is included in four CDP courses covering law enforcement, emergency medical and hazardous materials operations for CBR-NE incidents. The CDP is looking to incorporate fentanyl awareness training into additional courses.

The topic is also the subject of a recurring lecture in the CDP's weekly Evening Lecture Series which is offered to all CDP resident students, regardless of specialty.

The CDP provides advanced all hazards and mass casualty training to 50,000 emergency responders annually.

For more information about the CDP and its courses, visit <https://cdp.dhs.gov/find-training>.

WHAT'S HOT from SHOT?

New Guns for 2018

Mike Boyle

The 27th Annual Roundup Covering New Firearms of Most Interest to Law Enforcement

One of my favorite annual rituals is attending the SHOT Show. This event might be best described as the world's largest firearms bazaar where manufacturers, large and small, display their wares and introduce new products.

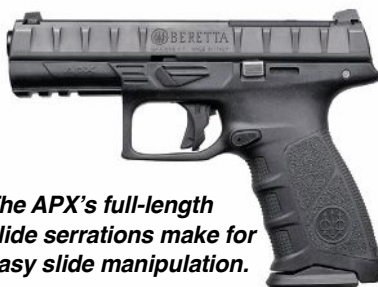

This year's event was held January 23-26, 2018, in Las Vegas, Nevada. A couple of days of hard touring will put even the most jaded firearms enthusiast into sensory overload. It's just impossible to take it all in!

There are, of course, thousands of items of interest to the law enforcement professional, including guns, ammunition and accessories. What follows are some brief descriptions of new firearms which might appeal to police professionals and there might be something else in this mix to keep you a little safer.

Beretta USA Corp.

(berettadefensetechnologies.com)

Although not a new pistol, the APX was Beretta's submission for the recent Army XM17 Modular Handgun System competition. Chambered for both the 9mm and .40S&W, the Beretta APX marries a fiberglass reinforced technopolymer frame to a steel slide and barrel. The APX is a full-size service pistol which utilizes a locked breech operating system. It is indeed a modular handgun and utilizes a serialized, removable chassis which can easily be separated from the grip frame for routine maintenance and cleaning. Interchangeable backstraps of different thickness and configuration allow the end user to optimize hand fit. The trigger breaks with about six pounds of rearward pressure and has a short tactile reset.

Slide serrations are especially prominent on the APX and provide a positive gripping surface for easy manipulation. Three dot sights are standard and tritium sights are available as a factory option. Like all contemporary service pistols, a rail for the mounting of a white light or laser is molded into the frame.

FN[®] America, LLC (fnamerica.com)

This year, FN is introducing an ultra-compact version of the FN SCAR[®] rifle to the law enforcement market. The SCAR SC has external dimensions similar to a sub-machine gun, but packs a more decisive 5.56mm punch. With its stock fully extended, the SCAR SC measures a hardy 21.71 inches, perfect for tight spots such as doors or hallways or deployment from a vehicle.

The subcompact version of the SCAR is select fire only and its sale is restricted to military and law enforcement. It utilizes a proven short stroke gas piston action and has a cyclic rate of 550-650 rounds per minute. The charging handle is nonreciprocating and the FN SCAR SC fires from a

SAINT EDGE™

Introducing the next level in our SAINT AR-15 series. Premier components and upgrades end to end, for accuracy, quick-handling and consistent performance. The Edge features a billet receiver with lightening cuts, and at just over 6 lbs., provides quicker maneuverability and target acquisition. Accutite™ tensioning, M16 BCG, Bravo Company furniture, and premium features make this an elite production gun at an incredible price.

rotating, locking bolt. FN crafts the receiver from monolithic aluminum which is given a hard anodized finish. The barrel is 7.5 inches long and it features a chrome lining.

To facilitate the mounting of optics, lights and lasers, the FN SCAR SC has a series of MIL-STD 1913 rails. Unloaded, the SCAR SC tips the scales at seven pounds. Its 30 round steel body magazine features a low friction follower for greater reliability.

The extremely compact SCAR SC design is an interesting alternative to pistol caliber submachine guns and it can compete very favorably with other short barrel rifles.

GLOCK®, Inc. (us.glock.com)

Like the Beretta APX, the Gen5 GLOCK hit the scene a little too late for last year's SHOT Show, but has already made a big impact in the market. The Gen5 GLOCK includes 20 different design changes over the earlier Gen4 family to deliver an improved shooting experience. The casual observer will note an absence of finger grooves, the ambidextrous slide stop, as well as a flared magazine well.

More than 20 design upgrades differentiate the new Gen5 GLOCK® pistols from the previous Gen4 models.

Less obvious is the exclusive nDLC finish and the GLOCK Marksman Barrel with enhanced polygonal rifling. The Gen5 family now includes the GLOCK 19, GLOCK 17, GLOCK 26, and GLOCK 34 in MOS configuration.

The real showstopper, however, was the GLOCK 19X. It might be best described as a crossover pistol, as it uses the full-size frame of the GLOCK 17 along with the shorter slide of the GLOCK 19. Comparisons to the timeless Colt® Commander are not too far off the mark. The GLOCK

The new GLOCK® 19X combines the best features of two of its most popular models.

19X is also given the Gen5 treatment, along with a unique coyote colored nPVD slide, combined with a matching frame.

O.F. Mossberg & Sons (mossberg.com)

New from Mossberg is a magazine fed variant of their workhorse 590 pump shotgun. The new 590M™ comes with a detachable, double stack box magazine which provides unrivaled continuity of fire in a pump-action shotgun. Not only does it hold more rounds, but it also makes for a much faster reload.

Mossberg offers five, ten, 15 and 20 round magazines as accessories. A ten round magazine ships with the gun, but, to take advantage of the concept, the end user needs to acquire a few extras. Two M models include a basic bead sight model and another model with a railed foregrip, heat shield and ghost ring sights.

Remington®
(remington.com)

The Remington 870 has been the most popular police shotgun for many years. Remington has offered a bewildering array of options for the 870 and, just when you think they have all the bases covered, they manage to put a new spin on this classic.

The Model 870 DM sports a detachable six round magazine which allows the user to bring it back up to full complement in the shortest amount of time. One could mix and match ammunition and quickly exchange buckshot for rifled slugs to meet the demands of the situation. Best of all, the 870 DM delivers rock-solid Remington reliability with vital controls in the same familiar location.

The new Model 870 DM features a six round, 12-gauge magazine.

Ruger® Firearms

Of late, Ruger has brought all sorts of interesting products forward, many of which have great appeal to the law enforcement professional. Brand-new to the Ruger fold is the Security-9™, an affordable 9mm pistol with some well-thought-of features.

The Security-9 is a polymer frame pistol which uses a trigger system Ruger defined as a Secure Action. It combines the smooth trigger pull of the LCP® II, with the short, crisp feel and positive reset of a single action. At first glance, it might look like a striker-fired pistol, but it is, in fact, a hammer-fired design.

The Security-9 is small enough for discreet carry, yet would be right at home in a Sam Browne duty rig. Positive qualities include decent sights; a textured, comfortable grip; and a surprisingly good trigger. For those who are old enough to remember the Ruger Security-Six revolver of the 1970s, the new Security-9 is true to the tradition of a pretty solid gun at a very reasonable price.

Some months ago, I heard rumblings that Ruger was going to make another attempt at bringing a pistol caliber carbine to the market. I'm happy to report that the new Ruger PC Carbine™ eclipses their earlier effort in every way. Chambered for the 9mm cartridge, the PC Carbine is a blowback design and major components include a 7075-T6 aluminum receiver, a chrome-moly steel barrel and a synthetic stock. An integrated Picatinny rail can be found on top of the receiver, while a smaller rail is located on the forend for the mounting of a light or laser. A rugged set of ghost ring sights is standard.

Ruger®'s new PC Carbine™ features interchangeable magazine wells for use of common Ruger and GLOCK® magazines.

The new Security-9™ is chambered in 9mm with a 15 round magazine.

Perhaps the best feature of the PC Carbine is the much improved trigger. This time around, Ruger borrowed heavily from their highly successful 10/22 rimfire rifle to create a very workable trigger with minimal overtravel and a positive reset. You won't necessarily mistake it for the trigger of a precision rifle, but it is light years beyond that of their original pistol caliber carbine.

SIG SAUER®

The P365's proprietary magazine design allows for 10+1 round capacity in a microcompact pistol.

The MCX VIRTUS is equipped with a folding and collapsible five position stock.

SIG SAUER is one of the true innovators in the industry and they continue to blaze new trails. New this year is the SIG SAUER P365. SIG describes the P365 as a microcompact and, after checking it out, I'm convinced it will give some of the other pistols in this class some serious competition.

Designed for discreet carry, the P365 is a striker-fired pistol with a polymer grip frame. The total length of the P365 is a tad less than six inches and it's only an inch wide. High visibility SIG X-RAY3 sights are standard to help get on target in any light condition. The P365 ships with a pair of ten round magazines.

A most unique quality of the P365 is the tapered magazine which is a double stack on the bottom and trims down to a single stack on top. This not only gives the P365 a leg up on capacity over competitive designs, but also makes for a very manageable grip. Factor in a clean, crisp trigger and you've got a world beater on your hands.

Short Barrel Rifles (SBRs) are the hot ticket these days and the latest spin on the SIG SAUER VIRTUS looks like another winner. Like other members of the VIRTUS tribe, the SIG MCX VIRTUS SBR is modular in nature and key components, such as the barrel, handguard and even chambering can be easily switched out, depending on the application at hand. The Matchlite™ Duo Trigger is a cut above other rifles of this type which will, no doubt, contribute to hit potential. A folding five position, adjustable stock is yet another unique feature. Ambidextrous AR-style controls are in the same familiar location which will speed up the learning curve for users of the VIRTUS SBR.

The M&P® 2.0™ Compact comes with four interchangeable palm swell inserts.

Smith & Wesson®
(smith-wesson.com)

The evolution of the Smith & Wesson M&P® autoloader continues. Last year, S&W introduced the M&P M2.0™ series which boasted a number of improvements over the original platform. This time around, they've launched the M&P 2.0 Compact in both 9mm and .40S&W.

Length and height of the M2.0 Compact is slightly trimmed back from the full-size

Reach Far into the Darkness with the OD40 Long Distance Illuminator

Mike Boyle

I'll confess to being a bit of a light nerd. My personal inventory includes dozens of different specimens, ranging from full-size rechargeables through pen-size units you can drop in a pocket. When I find myself in a dark place, having an instantly available light source helps keep me safe.

So, how did I come to have so many lights? I doubt if any other technology in the public safety field continues to evolve any faster than illumination tools. What was state of the art just a few short years ago has been quickly eclipsed by newer innovations. Just when you think you have it all covered, a new entry to the market offers significant, tangible advantages over what had come before.

The new OD40 Long Distance Illuminator from Optical Dynamics is indeed an innovation. With some other high intensity lights, I have enjoyed a degree of success illuminating objects or people in the distance. To date, I haven't discovered any handheld unit which projects light like the Optical Dynamics OD40. This game changing tool is capable of projecting a perfect circle of white light out to 200 yards – something you just can't do with an ordinary flashlight.

The quality which sets the OD40 apart from other lights is the proprietary Collimated Amplified Lens System (CALS). CALS technology gives the OD40 the ability to project a harmonized beam of light without the use of a reflector or diffuser. The multicoated 40 mm precision lens captures 100% of the light generated by the CREE LED to project a narrow, adjustable column of white light. Total light output is rated at 650 lumens.

The OD40 is crafted from aircraft grade aluminum alloy and weighs 14 ounces. Measuring 8.5 inches in length, it's a tad long for pocket carry, but it would be right at home in a belt scabbard or on a tac vest. The OD40 is engineered to be shockproof and resistant to momentary water immersion. Power is supplied by a pair of CR123A three volt lithium batteries which give a run time of 100 minutes. Like many contemporary illumination tools, the OD40 features a tailcap activation switch.

As luck would have it, the arrival of the OD40 coincided with some low light training on the range. I was able to clearly illuminate targets of 100 yards where they could be tagged by a partner with a rifle. Should your rifle be equipped with a high quality scope, I'm sure you could stretch that distance even further. Used at distances beyond the capability of ordinary flashlights, the Optical Dynamics OD40 is indeed a force multiplier. Options include a remote tailcap switch and one inch and 30mm rings to attach the OD40 to a rifle.

After giving the OD40 a shakedown, I am of the mind that it is a specialized, rather than general purpose, light for law enforcement personnel. This, of course, is not a bad thing and it fills the role very well. On the job, my travels often took me far off the beaten path and having a tool which could throw light a great distance would be a very big advantage. There are also some very obvious advantages for the tactical specialist or search and rescue applications.

The OD40 ships with a padded nylon storage case and a cleaning cloth, plus red and green colored lenses. One can also upgrade to a kit which includes a remote switch and scope rings.

Light technology continues to march on. If you require an illumination tool which can reach out and pierce the darkness, the Optical Dynamics OD40 is the way to go. Clearly, spotting potential problems in the distance will keep you safer.

For further information, check out the OD40 at www.longdistancelight.com.

The new OD40 projects a true collimated, focused beam of high definition light at long distances which allows for clear target identification.

service pistol. What you end up with is a double duty gun which can be carried in either plain clothes or in a duty rig. All the M2.0 enhancements are incorporated into the Compacts, including an aggressively textured grip with interchangeable palm swell inserts and a crisp trigger with a short tactile reset. Models are available with, or without, an ambidextrous frame mounted safety. The magazine capacity in the 9mm Compact is 15 rounds, while the .40S&W copy will hold 13 rounds.

The M&P Shield™ pistol has gone on to become one of the most popular pistols for concealed carry and it, too, has now been given the 2.0 upgrades. Models of the 2.0 Shield are available in 9mm and .40S&W. To further sweeten the pot, Smith & Wesson is now offering versions of the Shield with laser and laser/light combinations from Crimson Trace.

Springfield Armory® (springfield-armory.com)

Many folks associate Springfield Armory with the M1A™ rifle or 1911 pistol, but they produce many other products ideally suited for the law enforcement professional. This year, Springfield Armory introduced a few new variants of the SAINT™ rifle which should find a receptive audience. The Springfield Armory SAINT is a reasonably priced AR style rifle which includes a number of highly desirable frills as standard. It remains an excellent option for agencies or individual officers looking to purchase a quality AR-15 style rifle.

Springfield's XD-E™ polymer frame is just one inch wide.

Small pistols are a hot ticket these days and Springfield Armory has answered the call. A few months prior to the SHOT Show, they introduced the XD-E™ 9mm which represents a major deviation from the striker-fired pistols which dominate the market. The single stack XD-E is a hammer-fired, micropistol chambered for the 9mm and .45 ACP. Its trigger action is traditional DA/SA with a relatively long, heavy stroke for the first shot and a much lighter, shorter pull for subsequent shots. To my thinking, the DA/SA Springfield Armory XD-E is an ideal choice for folks who prefer appendix, inside the waistband carry. Truth be told, I'm just not a big fan of putting a striker-fired pistol down the front of my pants and the hammer-fired XD-E effectively resolves my concerns.

Springfield's popular striker-fired micro XD® was also given a facelift. The XD-S® Mod.2™ .45 ACP has enhanced grip texturing, a higher hand position on the grip frame, a trimmer slide, and an improved trigger. A fiber-optic front and low profile rear represent standard sighting equipment, but other options, including a Viridian® laser, will be available shortly. A grip safety, a trigger safety and loaded chamber indicator are barriers against an unintentional discharge.

Brand-new from Springfield Armory is the 911 .380 ACP pistol. This single-action mini blaster is similar in many respects to the classic 1911 and that alone will broaden its appeal. The 911 uses an aluminum alloy frame with either a stainless steel or black nitride slide to create a very small, lightweight carry package. Total length is only 5.5 inches with a height of four inches. Sights consist of an AmeriGlo® Pro-Glo™ front and tactical rack rear and this lefty likes the fact that the 911 has an ambidextrous safety.

Truth be told, I don't get all warm and fuzzy over .380 ACP pistols as a primary carry piece, especially when you can get a micro-size 9mm and only pay a slight size penalty. But, I remain a big proponent of backup guns and the SA911 would excel in that role.

Walther Arms (waltherarms.com)

A few years ago, Walther introduced their PPQ® line of striker-fired pistols which have met with critical success.

The PPQ line has grown to include the second generation M2, pistols optimized for competition and variants in .45 ACP. But, one hole remained in their extensive line which has now been filled. Enter the PPQ SC subcompact.

The PPQ SC is a chopped and channeled version of the original platform which is ideally suited for plainclothes and off-duty applications. It shares the superb trigger of the parent pistol, a rounded comfortable grip and distinctive Walther styling of the original. Its overall length is a trim 5.4 inches and, unloaded, it tips the scales at 21.1 ounces. Three dot combat sights are standard and metal surfaces are coated with Tenifer™ to resist corrosion. An ambidextrous slide stop and a Picatinny rail for the mounting of a laser or light are also part of the package. The magazine capacity is ten rounds.

Small hideout pistols such as the PPQ SC have pushed lesser guns to the back burner. Eleven rounds of 9mm ammunition immediately at your disposal makes for a formidable combination.

Future Shock

In addition to the products previously reviewed, there were a couple of other firearms which showed promise, but weren't ready for prime time. Hopefully, that will change over the next few months and we'll be able to see if they can make an impact in a very competitive market.

Archon Firearms displayed their Type B striker-fired 9mm pistol which looked like it had a great deal of potential. It features a very low bore axis, aggressive gripping surface and a proprietary recoil reducing mechanical design. The grip felt very comfortable and the Type B will accept front and rear sights designed for GLOCK pistols.

Avidity Arms displayed a striker-fired, polymer frame pistol which could fill another neglected niche. On the surface, this sounds like the same formula used by a dozen or so different manufacturers, but there is a big difference.

The Avidity Arms PD10 is a single stack pistol with a four inch barrel. So, what's the rub? Double stack pistols often have a grip circumference too large for users with small hands. Contrary to popular opinion, giving these same potential users a subcompact pistol with a short, fat grip does not help their cause and, if anything, a shorter sight radius just makes it more difficult.

The Avidity Arms PD10, with its slim grip, four inch barrel and longer slide, represents salvation for users with small hands. For that matter, it would be a good bet for shooters with larger hands as well.

I look forward to the 2019 SHOT Show. There is no doubt in my mind that there will be a fresh array of new firearms to report.

BUSTED!

James L. McClinton, Ph.D

Nice “Top Gun” maneuvering, Maverick... The U.S. Navy says the aircrew who used their warplane to create a vulgar skywriting above the town of Okanogan, Washington, have been grounded. An electronic warfare plane from Naval Air Station Whidbey Island created skywritings in the shape of male genitals in the skies over the rural community. Witnesses took photos and placed them on social media platforms, where they were widely viewed. The Navy said, “The actions of this aircrew are wholly unacceptable and antithetical to Navy core values. We have grounded the aircrew and are conducting a thorough investigation and we will hold those responsible accountable for their actions.” (Is this listed in the Washington “penal” code?)

“Not tonight, honey. I’m tired. Yeah, me, too.”... A 52-year-old man from Elgin, Illinois, had been using a Web site to meet up with “ladies of the evening” at local motels. Upon finding a new profile which interested him, he told his wife he’d be going out with his coworkers and made arrangements to meet for a “business transaction” in a neighboring town. The profile of this lady cited her age as 27, along with a faceless photo. The eventual “business” meeting took a troubled turn and a motel’s front desk was alerted of a noise disturbance after the call girl showed up at the hotel room and discovered that the man she had come to meet was her own husband of 19 years. It turns out the man’s wife had lied about her age in the profile. (That’s an awful version of the “Pina Colada Song”!)

“Paging MacGyver. MacGyver, please pick up the red courtesy phone”... A Kentucky driver pulled over so he could record video of a highly unusual sight – a car using a furniture moving dolly in place of a missing wheel. The video showed a car traveling down a Pikeville road with one of its rear tires missing and a furniture moving dolly in its place. As he recorded the video, the man said, “Only in Pike County.” Another man took a photo of the car after it reached its destination at an auto shop. That photo showed an ambulance parked next to the car while amused EMS responders stood by. (Technically, the car is now a “seven-wheeler.”)

REAL STORIES OF GENUINE ABSURDITY

Can you hear me now?...

A 69-year-old woman in Goodyear, Arizona, finally succumbed to a frustration many wives suffer. As her husband sat on the toilet, she barged in and “shot two bullets at the wall above his head to make him listen to me,” she told Goodyear police when they were called to the scene. The woman said her husband “would have had to be ten feet tall to be hit by the bullets,” but officers estimated the bullets struck about seven inches over the man’s head as he ducked. She was charged with aggravated assault. (On a positive note, he no longer has a problem with constipation.)

Who says that law enforcement doesn’t care?... In northeastern Pennsylvania, police say they put about $1,600 worth of crack cocaine in their “lost and found box” in hopes of reuniting the drug with its rightful owner. The drug was found in the parking lot of a shopping center outside Wilkes-Barre. In a Facebook post, headlined “FOUND ITEM,” Wilkes-Barre Township Police quipped the drug had been placed in the department’s “lost and found box” and invited the owner to come retrieve it. The post requested a picture of the crack’s owner holding the drug, along with an ID and a “written statement containing your claim to the stuff.” (These types of incidents always crack me up!)

A new form of “work release”... A group of inmates in Mississippi broke out of jail, only to break back in later. The four men jumped the fence of the Holmes-Humphreys County Correctional Facility and broke into a Dollar General store less than a mile away. “They stole cigarettes, cigarette lighters, phones, and just items they felt they could sell in jail,” said the Lexington Police Chief. Rather than running to potential freedom, the men snuck back into jail, going unnoticed. All four of the men maintain their innocence, but authorities claim that surveillance footage helped identify them. (They probably feel that the additional time added to their sentences for escaping should be removed for returning.)

Is this where the “Mile High” city gets its name?... Truley: “Hey I am very sorry truley. I am such a dumbass. Please forgive me.” Evidently, the person who had scratched the bumper of a woman’s car while it was parked in Denver, Colorado, left a note – and compensation – on her car. In an envelope in a plastic bag, along with the note, there was $40 cash – and half a joint. The money, she said, will go to try to fix the scratch, but she doesn’t know what to do with the marijuana. “I’m not a smoker,” she said. “I’m a runner.” (I have a feeling the other half of the joint may have contributed to this collision.) P&SN
